UNIFORM INSURANCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit the report and recommendations, with accompanying papers, of the insurance convention which met in February last at Chicago. The convention was called because of the extraordinary disclosures of wrongful insurance methods recently made by the Armstrong legislative committee of the State of New York, the suggestion that it should be called coming to me originally from Governor John A. Johnson, of Minnesota, through Commissioner of Insurance Thomas D. O'Brien, of that State. The convention consisted of about one hundred governors, attorneys-general, and commissioners of insurance of the States and Territories of the Union. The convention was seeking to accomplish uniformity of insurance legislation throughout the States and Territories, and as a prime step toward this purpose decided to endeavor to secure the enactment by the Congress of the United States of a proper insurance code for the District of Columbia, which might serve as a model for the several States. Before adjourning the convention appointed a committee of three attorneys-general and twelve commissioners of insurance of the various States to prepare and have presented to the Congress a bill which should embody the features suggested by the convention. The committee recently met in Chicago, and in thorough and painstaking fashion sought to prepare a bill which should be at once protective of policy holders and fair and just to insurance companies, and which should prevent the graver evils and abuses of the business, and at the same time forestall any wild or drastic legislation which would be more harmful than beneficial. The proposed bill is discussed at length in the accompanying letter by Supt. Thomas E. Drake, of the department of insurance in the District of Columbia.

I very earnestly hope that the Congress at the earliest opportunity will enact this bill into law with such changes as its wisdom may dictate. I have no expert familiarity with the business, but I have entire faith in the right judgment and single-minded purpose of the insurance convention which met at Chicago and of the committee of that convention which formulated the measure herein advocated. We are not to be pardoned if we fail to take every step in our power to prevent the possibility of the repetition of such scandals as those that have occurred in connection with the insurance business as disclosed by the Armstrong committee.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 17, 1906.

The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IRRIGATION ACT IN THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House as unfinished business the bill (H. R. 14184) to extend the provisions of the irrigation act to the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas calls up the unfinished business, which is the bill referred to by him.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that bill already before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent having been given on April 2, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in response to a platform demand of both of the great political parties in 1902, Congress passed what is known as the "reclamation act," providing for the reclamation by irrigation of the arid lands in the western half of the United States. The terms of that act confine this work to the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands. No direct appropriation of money was made for this work, but the public lands of the Government were set aside in certain States and Territories to be sold, the proceeds to be used as a fund for carrying on the irrigation work. That act embraced within its terms all of the arid lands within the United States except those in the State of Texas. The extreme western part of Texas is arid, and there are some streams where irrigation works may properly be constructed, if upon a survey by the reclamation service feasible projects are found. The bill before the House is merely to extend the provisions of the irrigation act to that portion of the arid lands omitted from the original act.

Mr. PAYNE. The original act applied to land belonging to the United States. These lands of which you speak never belonged to the United States, but they belong to the State of Texas, do they not?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I want to say to the gentleman that if he thinks the terms of the irrigation act apply only to the public domain of the Government, he is mistaken.

Mr. PAYNE. The act provided for the creation of a fund to arise from the sale of the public lands of the United States, and I can not see any condition under which any dollar of this fund should go to the benefit of the public lands belonging to the State of Texas.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if the State of Texas is not a member of the Union upon equal terms with every other State, and if the public lands of the United States do not belong to all the States in common?

Mr. PAYNE. The United States has title to the public lands in other States, but never had title to a foot of land in Texas that it did not buy for the purposes of a fort or some other public use, and pay for it. The other public lands were ceded to the United States.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will you explain how it is then that the proceeds arising from the sale of lands in other States than Texas are appropriated and given to the agricultural and mechanical college of that State and other States, and for educational purposes?

Mr. PAYNE. If we have done wrong in that, we certainly ought not to do wrong in this.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not think we have done wrong. That is a parallel case.

Mr. PAYNE. I think we did wrong in the other case, but that is no reason why we should in this.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand the force of the objection that is made by the gentleman from

New York. If the public lands of the Government belong to the National Government, and there are arid lands in the State of Texas that can be irrigated, as well as in some of the other States, I can not see why Texas should be discriminated against, and why the arid lands in Texas could not be reclaimed for the benefit of the whole country, as well as the arid lands in the other States.

Mr. PAYNE. The reclamation act provides for the reclamation of public lands of the United States and provides for the sale of those lands by the United States and that the proceeds go to the reclamation fund. Here is a proposition to take that fund set aside for that purpose and to create a further fund, and so go on with the work of completing it. Here is a proposition to divert a part of that fund entirely opposed to all the purposes of the reclamation act.

Let the State of Texas, that owns the land, take care of it.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the only purpose of the irrigation act is to reclaim the arid lands of the Government. They are reclaiming private lands throughout the arid States as well as public lands. I understand that some of the projects that the Government has constructed are not connected with the public lands, but are to irrigate private lands almost altogether. The object of the act is to reclaim the arid lands wherever they are, whether owned by the Government or private individuals.

Mr. PAYNE. I never knew before that the reclamation act was a beneficial or eleemosynary institution for the purpose of helping people who own arid lands. It is the first time I have heard a proposition of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I want to state to the House that the money is not appropriated or donated to any of these projects, but the money is loaned on ten years' time, to be paid back by those who receive the benefit of the act. The water users thus receiving the use of the water under the irrigation project are required to pledge their land to the Government to pay back in ten equal annual installments the cost of the project. As I say, if the gentleman from New York understands that the work of the Reclamation Service is to reclaim the public lands of the Government, he absolutely misunderstands the terms of the act and the work that is going on under it.

As I say, the bill now before the House does not undertake to change the terms of the irrigation act in any particular, except to merely extend the operation of the act to that part of the arid section of the country that is not now embraced in the act and is not receiving the benefit of it. At the time the act was passed the fact that there were arid lands in the State of Texas was not called to the attention of Congress, but since that time it has been the subject of discussion in different ways throughout the country.

The National Irrigation Congress at its last two annual meetings has passed a resolution favoring the extension of the irrigation act to Texas. The President, in his message at this session of Congress, has recommended to Congress that the act be extended to the State of Texas. The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, after a thorough consideration of all the questions involved in this bill, unanimously recommended that the act be extended to the State of Texas.

When I attempted to call this bill up some weeks ago the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] objected to its consideration, and while those of us who had investigated the merits of the measure were surprised that an objection should be made, I must confess that I was even more surprised at the grounds given by the gentleman for his objection. Substantially it was based upon the contention that Texas has no interest in the vast public domain of this Government and is not entitled to share in any of the benefits to be derived therefrom. I suppose he is preparing to offer the same objection now. It is scarcely necessary for me to say that this is a strange and discordant doctrine to the people of Texas, who have long supposed that their State was a member of this Union on an equal footing with every other State.

Let us further examine the national irrigation act and see what its provisions and purposes are and then go further into the objection of the gentleman from Iowa and see if it is tenable.

The act was passed in 1902, and provided that the moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, beginning on July 1, 1901, should be reserved, set aside and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "reclamation fund," to be used in the examination and survey for and the construction and maintenance of irrigation works for the storage diversion and development of waters for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands in the States and Territories mentioned.

The purpose of the act is to reclaim the arid and semiarid lands of the West by irrigation where rainfall is too light and uncertain for successful farming. It applies only to arid and semiarid lands, and it is immaterial whether they are held by private or public ownership, and does not apply to any lands where there is an abundance of rainfall. According to the provisions of the act, the selection and construction of irrigation projects and the allotment of money from the reclamation fund therefor is left practically to the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Another important feature of the law is that the money expended for irrigation shall not be a gratuity to the land owners receiving the benefits thereof, but only a loan to them which they must return to the Government in ten equal annual installments without interest. The reclamation fund is therefore a revolving fund going out to do its work and then coming back to be sent out again and again upon similar missions. It is also a large and growing fund. It now amounts to about $30,000,000, and is being constantly increased by the sale of public lands to the amount of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 annually. And when we consider that there are about 500,000,000 acres of the public domain yet to be sold for the benefit of the reclamation fund, we can form some conception of what its magnitude may be ultimately and of the tremendous results it will accomplish in the work of reclaiming arid lands.

If the present policy of irrigation shall be continued and wisely preserved and administered, as I have no doubt it will be, I do not hesitate to express the belief that ultimately all the arid lands of this country will be reclaimed wherever practicable, and all the money utilized for that purpose returned to the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that all the arid land of this country is in the western part of the United States. It is all within the States and Territories to which the act applies, except that which is within the State of Texas. Nearly the western half of Texas is arid. Why should not the act apply to her? Why should she be discriminated against?

Is it because none of the public domain is located within her borders? Is the question of beneficial ownership in land determined by its location?

Mr. Speaker, I deny such a doctrine. The States own all the land within their respective boundaries only in the sense that they exercise governmental jurisdiction and dominion over them and their occupants. But the beneficial ownership may be, and indeed usually is, in another. The public domain belongs to the National Government wherever situated, and the individual States do not actually own any more interest in them than they do in the lands within their borders held and owned by private individuals.

As members of the Union, the States stand upon an equality and are entitled to share equally in the blessings and benefits of the National Government in every respect whatsoever. While the States individually do not own any of the public domain, yet, through the National Government, they own it in common, and it should be disposed of for their common benefit. This doctrine has been recognized from the foundation of the Government. The irrigation law is founded upon it, as I shall hereafter show. The gentleman from Iowa, however, contends that none of the reclamation fund should be used for irrigation in the State of Texas, because when Texas was admitted into the Union she did not transfer her public lands to the National Government, but was permitted to retain them.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a late day to reopen the case between Texas and the United States Government for the purpose of adjusting equities between them. This service was rendered by Congress to the satisfaction of the State and the Government when Texas was admitted into the Union more than sixty years ago, and the settlement then made has been accepted and acquiesced in ever since, and it ought now to be res adjudicata.

If the gentleman has looked into that transaction, he will remember that when Texas applied for admission she was a sparsely settled and independent republic, and burdened with a great national debt. A few years before she had declared her independence of Mexico, of which she was a province, and while she had achieved her independence by a war in which her valorous sons had given a new meaning to heroism and patriotic sacrifice, it had taxed her beyond her resources and left her not only with a great burden of debt, but also with the sacred obligation of caring for her veterans who had survived the war as well as for the widows and orphans of those who gave up their lives in that war. With these burdens and obligations resting upon her she had passed through the difficult and expensive formative period of an independent government.

Therefore it is not at all strange that when she came face to face with the proposition to surrender her own national character and assume the position of a State in this Union she was heavily burdened with debt and that there were numerous equities to be adjusted between the two governments.

The enabling act, passed by Congress on March 1, 1845, proposing the terms upon which Texas could come into the Union, shows that these equities were considered and adjusted by Congress. I read the second section of that act, which relates to the point under discussion:

Said State, when admitted into the Union after ceding to the United States all public edifices, fortifications, barracks, ports and harbors, navy and navy-yards, docks, magazines, arms, armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defense belonging to said Republic of Texas, shall retain all public funds, debts, taxes, and dues of every kind which may belong to or be due and owing said republic; and shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits, to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said Republic of Texas, and the residue of said lands after discharging said debts to be disposed of as said State may direct; but in no event are said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.

Thus it will be seen that the proposition was for the Government of the United States to take over all the property of a national character belonging to the Republic of Texas, including her ports and custom-houses, her principal if not her only means of collecting revenue for the payment of her debts, and in lieu thereof Texas was to retain her public lands with which to pay them.

That Texas accepted these terms clearly appears from another act of Congress, passed on December 29, 1845, following, from which I will now read, and which also defines the status of Texas as one of the States of the Union:

Whereas the Congress of the United States by a joint resolution approved March 1, 1845, did consent that the territory properly included within and rightfully belonging to the Republic of Texas to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of government, to be adopted by the people of said Republic, by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing Government, in order that the same might be admitted as one of the States of the Union; which consent of Congress was given upon certain conditions specified in the first and second sections of said joint resolution; and

Whereas the people of the said Republic of Texas by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing Government, did adopt a constitution and erect a new State with a republican form of government, and in the name of the people of Texas, and by their authority, did ordain and declare that they assented to and accepted the proposals, conditions, and guaranties contained in said first and second sections of said resolution; and

Whereas the said constitution, with the proper evidence of its adoption by the people of the Republic of Texas, has been transmitted to the President of the United States and laid before Congress in conformity to the provisions of said joint resolution: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That the State of Texas shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

Mr. Speaker, here we have the terms of the settlement; here we have the solemn judgment of Congress adjusting the equities between Texas and the Government; here we have the judgment of Congress to the effect that under conditions existing then it was right and just that Texas should retain her public lands; that it was necessary for her to do so in order to advance her to an equality with the other States. And upon the acceptance of these terms which Congress itself proposed, the resolution which I have read was passed solemnly and formally declaring that Texas was not only one of the States of the Union, but that she was admitted on an equal footing with the other States in all respects whatever. I submit that language could not be broader or more comprehensive or emphatic. That judgment of Congress has stood without question for more than sixty years. To now repudiate it would be unjust to the Government; it would be unjust to Texas, and it would be unjust to the memory of the patriotic men who were Members of that Congress.

But, Mr. Speaker, although I believe the plea of res adjudicata which I have offered is entirely sufficient to meet the objection of the gentleman from Iowa, it is not at all necessary that we should rely upon it. We can reopen the case and adjust equities with him with no fear that the balance will be against us.

Texas when admitted into the Union was very sparsely settled, having a total population of but little over 50,000, while her outstanding indebtedness was the enormous sum of over $12,000,000, a per capita of about $250 for every man, woman, and child. Her unappropriated public domain though large was comparatively from a pecuniary standpoint worthless. It could not be sold, as the State soon found out, so she had to find a different way of discharging her public debt. Accordingly, as a means of doing this, in 1850 she ceded to the United States Government 98,380 square miles of her territory, for which the Government paid her the sum of $10,000,000, which was applied to the payment of her public debt.

The balance of her public domain has gone—some of it to the veterans and the widows and children of the veterans of her war with Mexico for independence, some of it for free homes for her own people and for immigrants from other States, some of it for public buildings, a large part of it to railroads, and the balance to free schools. There is not a foot of unappropriated public domain in the State of Texas to-day, although there remains unsold a part of her school lands.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the great bulk of the public domain of the Government has been disposed of for similar purposes in the various States. Donations have been made to war veterans and to actual settlers. Appropriations of lands have been made for public buildings and eleemosynary institutions, for the construction of railroads and canals, and for educational purposes in the various States and Territories.

I have not complete figures at hand, but I have gone far enough into the investigation to enable me to say that considering the comparative sizes of the States, the other States have each had almost if not quite as much benefit from Government lands as Texas has had from her own. While, on the other hand, the nation as a whole has received a like benefit from the public lands of Texas as from its own lands appropriated for public uses and improvements in the other States and Territories.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a stronger equity still, if it may be so called, in favor of Texas. The greater part of the public domain which is set apart for the irrigation fund was acquired after Texas came into the Union. I refer to the territory acquired by us from Mexico. As a matter of fact, it may be truthfully said that it was through Texas that this vast territory was brought into our possession and under our dominion. If Texas had not come into the Union there would have been no war with Mexico, and if there had been no war with Mexico there would have been no cession of this territory to us, but it would have remained with Mexico. But Texas came into the Union and we had the war, and in the American army engaged in that war Texas had more volunteer soldiers than any other State in the Union. Not only that, but when the $15,000,000 was paid to Mexico, under the treaty of peace, for the territory ceded to us, Texas contributed her share of the money.

Mr. Speaker, let it be denied that Texas came into the Union upon an equality with the other States. Let it be admitted, if you will, that some of the other States have not enjoyed the benefit of public lands to the extent that Texas has; but for the sake of all that is fair, just, and right do not deny to Texas the fruits of the victory for which her brave sons fought and died, and do not withhold from her that which she contributed her own money to buy.

Is there anyone here who will stand up and say that California, Nevada, Utah, or the other irrigation States and Territories have a better claim upon this public domain than Texas? If so, I want to remind him that Texas had perfected her claim before they had entered the chrysalis territorial state, before they had even come into being, and nothing has since occurred to impair her claim.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have up to this time been discussing this question from the standpoint of the individual State. Let us now look at it from the national standpoint, the only standpoint from which Congress can view it or legislate upon it, for I suppose there is not a gentleman upon this floor who would seriously contend for a moment that Congress has the power to pass any law primarily for the benefit of the individual States or for any purpose other than for the common good of all.

The public domain which Congress has set aside for irrigation purposes belongs to the National Government, and Congress has no right to appropriate it to any other than a national use, and in my opinion it has not attempted to do so. The policy of reclaiming the great arid region of the West is a great national policy entered upon by the Government not for the benefit of the individual States and Territories where the work of reclamation may be carried on, but for the benefit of all the States and of the people of every part of the Union. If this be not true, then I believe that all will agree with me it would be the duty of Congress to go out of the irrigation business. And if it be true that the policy was entered upon merely as a means of donating the public lands to the States and Territories wherein they are situated it would have been far better to have made the donation direct, so as not to have assumed the responsibility of a work purely local in character and beyond the scope of the national function.

But, as I have already asserted, the national irrigation act was passed for the benefit of the whole country. The immense region where the great work of reclamation is to be carried on, which embraces at least one-half of the whole area of the United States, was originally acquired for the national benefit, and now its development is of deep concern to the nation as a whole. Comparatively speaking, this section is practically undeveloped. Its population, which is poorly distributed, is not one-tenth of the whole population of the entire country. But it is endowed with all of the natural elements which go to make up a fruitful and prosperous country except rainfall. Its climate is the most healthful and salubrious to be found anywhere on the globe. The richness and fertility of the soil upon its plains and in its valleys are not surpassed anywhere, and the stores of minerals in its mountains are inexhaustible. But the one great factor lacking is water. This to a very large extent will be supplied under the operation of the national irrigation act. By impounding, storing, and utilizing the flood waters which have heretofore gone to waste, and by the control and diversion of the streams that run down to the seas from the plains and the snow-capped mountains, we will make homes for the people who will raise crops, develop mines, construct railroads, build cities, establish industries, and buy from the merchants and manufacturers of the East, and thus add to the wealth, prosperity, and well-being of the nation as a whole and of every part of it.

I want to remind this House that Congress entered upon this beneficent policy in response to the platform demands of both the great political parties, and to show that it was the intention of those most largely responsible for the act that it should be broad and national in its scope and purposes, I desire to offer a few quotations.

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress in 1901, in urging legislation upon the subject of irrigation, said:

It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid region useful by engineering works for water storage as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid region by engineering works of another kind. The storing of the floods in reservoirs at the headwaters of our rivers is but an enlargement of our present policy of river control under which levees are built on the lower reaches of the same streams.

Again, he says in the same message:

The reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich every portion of our country just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States. The increased demand for manufactured articles will stimulate industrial production, while wider home markets and the trade of Asia will consume the larger food supplies and effectually prevent western competition with eastern agriculture. Indeed, the products of irrigation will be consumed chiefly in upbuilding local centers of mining and other industries, which would not otherwise come into existence at all. Our people as a whole will profit, for successful home making is but another name for the upbuilding of the nation.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report for 1901, uses this language:

The expansion of our interior trade and commerce through the settlement of the arid lands and the increase of population in the West would benefit every class and section of our country in the same way that the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys has brought prosperity and wealth to the States east of the Alleghenies. The settlement of the vast arid region still farther to the west would benefit the whole eastern half of the United States by creating new home markets for eastern merchants, southern cotton growers, and all manufacturers. It would enormously increase local traffic and would tend to relieve the congestion of our great centers of population, creating opportunities which would go far to allay social discontent. It would promote industrial stability by giving to every man who wanted it a home on the land. * * * The investigations which have been carried on demonstrate that, looking at the matter from all sides, there is no one question now before the people of the United States of greater importance than the conservation of the water supply and the reclamation of the arid lands of the West and their settlement by men who will actually build homes and create communities.

In discussing the bill before the Senate in March, 1902, providing for national irrigation, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, said:

If you bring under cultivation the fertile lands that may be cultivated by irrigation in the very healthful climate of the West—the best climate in the world—together with the mineral resources and everything which grows to make a great and populous country, by the use of agricultural lands in connection with the other advantages, I think the population might be increased perhaps twenty, thirty, or even forty million. Nobody can tell how many people could live there. We know it is true that in desert countries which had been irrigated the population was more dense than anywhere else. We have all the evidence that it will be the same in that region.

There is nothing to destroy human life in the arid region. There is no malaria, no damp climate, nor anything that tends to shorten human life. In that high altitude, with the advantages of health and vigor, and with the abundant resources of the country, agricultural and mineral, we have reason to believe that the population will increase as much as I have stated.

I believe, from the tone of the press, that the people of the East are waking up to the importance of the accomplishment of these great results. They are not biased or sectional when they talk about irrigation. That feeling does not exist. They are willing to take hold anywhere, as is shown by their history, for the purpose of aiding in these enterprises, which not only increase wealth, but increase population and increase the grandeur and power of this Republic. I think that is the universal sentiment.

Senator TILLMAN, speaking upon the same bill, said:

The only thing which I see in this proposition that probably is strange is that instead of coming directly to the President and asking a specific appropriation for annual improvement along this line, as we are making continuing contracts for improving rivers and harbors, we come here and merely limit these people to a fund that is somewhat nebulous and will certainly prove inadequate. I think the people of the East—and I live in a State in the East where we get plenty of rain ordinarily—should go at this in a broader and more statesmanlike way, and instead of using the money that is to be derived from these sales, which, as I said, will be uncertain in amount, and the amount is going to be inadequate, we should go at it by a direct appropriation.

Senator TELLER, in his remarks upon that bill, used this language:

We do not appeal to Senators to give this measure support because we have done that, for that was only our duty as we saw it to the country at large. I merely want to impress upon the Senate that we are not asking for local benefit and local advantage, but a benefit and advantage that are open to every citizen of the United States, in every part of it. We believe that the Government has never expended a dollar that will do as much good as the money that will be spent on these arid lands in the way of providing water for their cultivation.

Speaking to the same bill, Senator GALLINGER said:

Mr. President, even from a selfish standpoint, or from selfish considerations, I should give my vote in favor of this bill. We are engaged in New England largely in manufactures and we are seeking new markets for our manufactured goods. I feel sure that every thoughtful New England man will agree that when the arid region of our country is reclaimed, and American families and American homes are established on these lands, it will open a new market for the manufactured goods of New England. Possibly our people have not to any very considerable extent considered that view of the subject, which, to my mind, would be a controlling reason if I had no other reason for voting for the bill that is now before the Senate.

In a speech in this House upon this question Hon. F. G. NEWLANDS, now Senator from Nevada, said:

It is an uncontrovertible fact that the prosperity of the West causes a reflex agricultural prosperity in the agriculture of the East. Suppose the 600,000,000 acres of arid land west of the one hundredth meridian, and the industries which have arisen in connection therewith, should be suddenly wiped from the face of the earth. What would be the result? Disaster would follow in many an eastern community, because thousands of farms and factories depend upon the orders of their western customers. These factories employ hands, and those hands, when employed, live well and spend well. They create a demand for great amounts of farm products. To bring the illustration still further, does anyone contend that the Atlantic States would be benefited if the whole country west of the Alleghenies were effaced from the map? The cases are parallel. One part of the country is the complement of the other, and the prosperity of one section will not retard but will help all the others.

Especially would the Atlantic States be helped by the development of the Pacific slope, for the Western States would buy from the East, while at the same time they would bring great sums of money into the country from their own sales of produce to the Orient.

The Hon. WILLIAM A. REEDER, of Kansas, in speaking upon this subject on the floor of this House in 1902, said:

When we look at the matter from the broad national point of view, we see that every class of our people will be benefited by the creation of new communities in the arid regions. Every new settler creates a demand for all the manufactured articles that he must use to cultivate his land, to stock his farm, to furnish his house, and to clothe himself and his children. When we look at the internal commerce and markets for our eastern manufacturers which have been created by the 7,500,000 acres of land which have been reclaimed by private enterprise, we can form some idea, by comparison, of the enormous markets which would be furnished by the reclamation and settlement of the many millions of acres which can only be reclaimed by the action of the Government.

Hon. W. L. JONES, of Washington, speaking in favor of the national irrigation bill, thus eloquently proclaimed its benefits:

Pass this bill and its beneficent influences will lighten the burdens and gladden the hearts of our people of every class and condition, largely solve the social problem of discontent that agitates our cities, strengthen the fibers of the nation, kindle anew the fires of patriotism almost smothered by poverty and distress, and give new impetus to that onward march of civilization that has been the wonder of the nineteenth century and the glory of the twentieth.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote from other Senators and Members of the House upon this subject, but will not do so. In urging the passage of the irrigation act the President, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Senators and Representatives who delivered speeches upon it all placed it upon the broad national ground that it would be for the benefit of the whole country, that it was as much for the good of the East as it was for the West, and I have no doubt that it was upon this ground that the act was passed. Any effort to have secured this legislation merely for the benefits to be derived from it locally would have been met with derision and failure.

This being true, I now want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if our people as a whole would not derive as much benefit from the irrigation of the arid lands in Texas as they would from the irrigation of arid lands in California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, or in any other of the States or Territories? And if so, why should the arid lands of Texas be excluded from the act? Speaking from a national standpoint, do we not do violence to our own interests when we refuse to extend the act to Texas? Are homes in that State, is the development of industries in that State, and is the upbuilding and extension of markets in that State for the merchants and manufacturers of the East less important and valuable than elsewhere? Is the gentleman from Iowa really sincere in his desire to build up our home markets, which he so eloquently eulogized on the floor of this House a few days ago?

Mr. Speaker, the questions I have asked very clearly suggest the absolute absurdity of the position taken by the gentleman from Iowa in opposing the extension of the irrigation act to Texas. His view of this question is entirely too narrow and contracted, and I believe is unworthy of the high position which he occupies as a Member of this House.

The gentleman does not deny that there are arid lands in Texas which may be reclaimed. That is not the ground upon which he bases his objection. He raises a question of far more serious import. He calls in question the equality of a sovereign State as a member of this Union. He demands an accounting between that State and the Government. When, I want to ask him, did the Government begin the keeping of accounts with the States in regard to national matters? If Texas must render a public-land account, then let the other States do likewise. They have all received the benefit of public lands in various ways, directly and indirectly, from the Government. So let them come up and render accounts also. When we have done this let us go further and have the States render accounts for what they have received for public buildings and rivers and harbors and other things. Let us have a general adjustment and settlement all around, which we can use as a basis when we go to make future appropriations. If the gentleman is correct in his theory, the Government should not appropriate more money for Federal purposes in one State than in another. Neither New York nor Pennsylvania nor Illinois, with their immense population and territory, should have more than Rhode Island, Vermont, or Nevada, regardless of the needs of the Government.

But the gentleman is not correct. The Government will not neglect its own interest merely for the sake of keeping its accounts with the States in regard to appropriations evenly balanced. Under the Constitution it will do its national work as heretofore wherever needed or desirable, without reference to State lines and without reference to previous appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, the proposition presented by the bill I am advocating is simple. It merely proposes to extend the provisions of the national irrigation act so as to include that comparatively small portion of the arid and semiarid region which happened to be omitted when the act was passed. It ought to be immaterial to the House where it may be situated, whether in Texas or elsewhere. It ought to be sufficient to know that it is arid and that it is within the national domain.

We are not proposing to change the policy of the Government in any respect. The present law does not confine the proceeds of the sale of lands to the use of the State wherein the land is situated. Forty-nine per cent of the whole fund arising from the sale of land in all the States can be spent in any one of the States—in Kansas, for instance, which has less than 1,000,000 acres of the public domain within her borders. Ultimately the proceeds of 250,000,000 acres might be spent for irrigation in Kansas under the law as it now exists.

We are not proposing to change the irrigation policy of the Government by asking for irrigation or drainage of lands where the climate is humid, where there is a reasonable amount of rainfall. If my bill passes, only the arid or semiarid lands of Texas could be reclaimed, as now is the case with other States.

The bill carries no appropriation. If it should become a law, its effect would be to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause surveys to be made in the arid region of Texas, and if he should anywhere find conditions such as to make the construction of an irrigation plant feasible and the return of the cost reasonably certain, he could, when the fund in his hands should be sufficient, make an allotment for the purpose, just the same as is now being done in the other arid States. It would enable the Reclamation Service to extend its irrigation systems into Texas on interstate streams when necessary or desirable, as is about to be done on the Rio Grande under the act passed by the last Congress. The Reclamation Service will soon want to enter Texas on the Pecos River by the extension of the irrigation system which is now being constructed on that river above in New Mexico, and in time I have no doubt that it will be desirable to enter the State with irrigation systems on other interstate streams. This can not be done under the existing law.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the passage of this bill as an act of justice to Texas, in recognition of her equal footing with all other States as a member of the Union, and as a fit acknowledgment of the splendid part she took in the great military achievement which gave us the larger part of that domain from which the irrigation fund is derived. I urge it in the interest of all our people as an extension and completion of the great national scheme of reclamation. It is approved by many if not all the officers of the National Irrigation Association. It has been twice indorsed by the National Irrigation Congress, composed of delegates from all the arid States and Territories of the West. It has the approval of the Reclamation Service. It has, after the most thorough consideration, been formally recommended to Congress by the President in his message. And it has been favorably reported, after full hearing, by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

I earnestly protest against making this a provincial or local matter. It should be kept where it was originally placed, upon the high plane of national development for the national good.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ESCH, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John W. McCann (bill H. R. 232, 56th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submitting a draft of a bill to authorize employees of the Executive Departments to administer oaths under certain circumstances—to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law on the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Neutrality, William Clark, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the acts and resolutions of the second session of the third legislative assembly of Porto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to the request of the House, copies of accounts of the postal agent at Shanghai and consul at Tientsin, China—to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and so much as relates to accounts ordered to be printed, but not the copies of regulations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5537) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to allot homesteads to the natives of Alaska, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3295); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. McGAVIN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5) to provide for the refunding of certain money, and so forth, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3294); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WELBORN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8365) for the relief of C. A. Berry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3297); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RIVES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16581) for the relief of George W. Schroyer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3298); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2368) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3299); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. TIRRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2578) for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3300); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 18276) to provide campaign badges for officers, enlisted men, sailors, or marines who served honorably in the Spanish, Philippine, or China campaigns, and who were not in the United States service on January 11, 1905—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18277) to permit the naturalization of citizens of Porto Rico, of the Philippine Islands, and of other possessions of the United States—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. SHARTEL: A bill (H. R. 18278) to establish in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be known as the Bureau of Public Highways, and to provide for national aid in the improvement of public roads—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FOWLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 18279) to fix a 10 per centum ad valorem duty on teas and coffees imported into the United States from Canada—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BONYNGE: A bill (H. R. 18280) providing for the compilation and publication of volume 3 of Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Organic Laws of the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 18281) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories, to limit the Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18282) to increase the compensation of the members of the New Mexico legislature—to the Committee on the Territories.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 18283) granting an increase of pension to John Nicholas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 18284) granting a pension to Margaret Abram—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BIRDSALL: A bill (H. R. 18285) granting an increase of pension to Frank H. Holman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18286) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Hartinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 18287) for the relief of the heirs of Daniel Linebaugh—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER: A bill (H. R. 18288) to provide relief for such employees in the United States navy-yards that have been disabled while in performance of their duty—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DAWSON: A bill (H. R. 18289) granting a pension to William M. Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 18290) granting a pension to Mary Gordon—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18291) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Rosborough—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 18292) granting a pension to John W. Davenport—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FASSETT: A bill (H. R. 18293) granting an increase of pension to Lucius D. Cardwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18294) granting an increase of pension to James F. Roody—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 18295) granting a pension to Joshua B. Casey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18296) granting a pension to Melvin A. Carey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18297) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lorendo E. Thayer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT of California: A bill (H. R. 18298) granting a pension to Wilson Carey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18299) granting a pension to Clement Hickman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HINSHAW: A bill (H. R. 18300) granting an increase of pension to Frederick D. Carpenter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 18301) for the relief of the heirs of William Samuel Custis, deceased, late of Onancock, Accomac County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KEIFER: A bill (H. R. 18302) granting a pension to Ellen Bernard Lee—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KLINE: A bill (H. R. 18303) granting an increase of pension to James W. Krader—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 18304) for the relief of the Compañia de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 18305) for the relief of Reuben B. Friday, of Sevier County, Ark.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 18306) granting a pension to Edward T. Lincoln—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 18307) for the relief of Pollard & Wallace—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 18308) granting a pension to Clay Riggs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McMORRAN: A bill (H. R. 18309) granting an increase of pension to David Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18310) granting an increase of pension to Virgil A. Bayley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18311) granting an honorable discharge to Lewis Presley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 18312) granting a pension to Margaret J. Ferguson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18313) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca A. Cole—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18314) granting an increase of pension to John Sweney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 18315) granting a pension to Joseph A. Nimmo—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18316) granting an increase of pension to Minor E. Duke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 18317) for the relief of Evelyn Clifton Beckwith, widow of James L. S. Beckwith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18318) granting a pension to Martha Jane Goddard—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 18319) granting an increase of pension to Newton Kinnison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 18320) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan M. Hunter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 18321) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Washington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18322) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah James—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18323) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rankin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAMUEL: A bill (H. R. 18324) granting a pension to Charles H. Lunger—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WANGER: A bill (H. R. 18325) granting an increase of pension to John W. Schofield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEISSE: A bill (H. R. 18326) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Dicke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15043) granting a pension to Anne Dinan—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11176) granting a pension to Charles T. Weaver—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 18151) granting an increase of pension to George Camp—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5318) to amend the act approved March 15, 1878, entitled "An act for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army"—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 5571) granting an increase of pension to William Cary—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1906.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following prayer:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof.

* * * * * * *

God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved.

Father, we come to Thee when we need Thee. We seek Thee in our calamities, as we have sought Thee in our triumphs. Draw near to us here. Draw near to the people of this nation in the midst of great calamity. Thou art from everlasting to everlasting, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Thou wilt oversee us; Thou wilt help us, and we come to Thee even in the moment of weakness. We come to Thee in our foolishness to ask for Thy wisdom, in our terror to ask for God's guidance, in our weakness to ask for Thy strength.

Be with us. Be with Thy servants who are in the midst of trial. Be with this whole land, that this land may know what its duty is; how brothers may help brothers; how each can help all; that we are one family in the arms of the living God. Father, we ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, Thine is the power, Thine is the glory. Forever, Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITION TO POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6297) providing for the erection of an addition to the post-office building at Washington, D. C., to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 8, after the word "including," to strike out "lift" and insert "elevator;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed, for the purpose of providing additional accommodations for the post-office, an extension to the United States custom-house, in the city of Washington, D. C., at a cost not to exceed $8,000, including elevator, and all necessary changes in, alterations of, and repairs to the present building, and of the heating and plumbing systems, which may be incident to the construction of such addition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HANSBROUGH, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings and proceedings as may be had before such committee or its subcommittees in connection with matters pending before it, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DEPARTMENTAL INFORMATION AFFECTING MARKETS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10129) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 9, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, line 14, after the word "thereof," insert "and every Member of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

C. D. CLARK,
KNUTE NELSON,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN J. JENKINS,
C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
H. D. CLAYTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEE introduced a bill (S. 5751) to fix the status of the Fifth and Sixth Regiments of Delaware Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 5752) granting an increase of pension to Ruth M. Hoag; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5753) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Lawrence; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT introduced a bill (S. 5754) granting a pension to Hannah McCarty; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRAZIER introduced a bill (S. 5755) for the relief of Nathaniel F. Cheairs; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 5756) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Bell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5757) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Swain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEMENWAY introduced a bill (S. 5758) granting an increase of pension to Joshua J. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5759) for the relief of John Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 5760) for the relief of Priscilla J. Shipman, administratrix of the estate of John J. Shipman, deceased, for work done and materials furnished to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5761) granting an increase of pension to Sallie B. Welch; and

A bill (S. 5762) granting an increase of pension to Dewitt C. Winburn (with accompanying papers).

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 5763) to correct the military record of William J. Alexander; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KNOX introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Henry Eash; and

A bill (S. 5765) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Montgomery.

AMENDMENTS TO RAILROAD RATE BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending rate bill. The amendment is short, and I ask that it may be read.

The amendment was read, and ordered to be printed, and to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WARREN to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, viz: Add to section 3 of said act the following:

Provided, however, That in time of war or threatened war preference and precedence shall, upon the representation of the President of the United States of the need therefor, be given, over all other traffic, to the transportation of troops and material of war, and carriers shall adopt every means within their control to facilitate and expedite the military traffic.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of two assistants in the Senate document room to $1,600 and $1,800, respectively, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITIA ORGANIZATIONS IN CIVIL WAR.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a list, arranged by States, showing which of the military organizations accepted into the service of the United States during the civil war were so accepted as militia organizations.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 5533) to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Has the bill been before the committee?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it was reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I suggest that if we are to remain in session we go to the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Iowa kindly wait until the Senate is in order?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa has been recognized. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in dealing with the question which is under consideration in the Senate as the unfinished business, the railroad rate bill, the experience of Senators has demonstrated the fact that sometimes it is necessary to have conferences. Notwithstanding efforts to get at an agreement on matters which are of very grave moment, there is great difference of opinion. I think probably the business would be expedited and we could reach some satisfactory conclusion if the bill were laid aside for the balance of the day and the Senate should now adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me present some morning business?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

[The routine business presented by Mr. CLAY appears under its appropriate heading.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I was requested by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, he will ask permission to address the Senate on the rate bill. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 11029. An act to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Big Stone Gap, Va.; and

H. R. 15434. An act to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 10292. An act granting to the town of Manco, Colo., the right to enter certain lands;

H. R. 17415. An act to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska; and

H. R. 17576. An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

H. R. 11490. An act granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric power plants in the San Bernandino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

H. R. 11862. An act to enable the various missionary societies and religious organizations now occupying lands for religious purposes in the Territory of Oklahoma to purchase the same, and to receive patents in fee therefor; and

H. R. 17719. An act to prevent the copying, selling, or disposing of rights of citizenship of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, and providing punishment therefor.

H. R. 17833. An act providing for the administration of the operations of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation.

H. R. 17945. An act authorizing the Borderland Coal Company to construct a bridge across Tug Branch of Big Sandy River, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 5842. An act to correct the military record of Charles F. Deisch;

H. R. 12892. An act granting an honorable discharge to Seth Davis; and

H. R. 13917. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Robert W. Liggett.

COURTS AT MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. KNOX. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5489) to provide for sittings of the circuit and district courts of the southern district of Florida in the city of Miami, in said district, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT A motion to adjourn is pending. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 19, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by Rev. JOHN VAN SCHAICK, Jr., of the Church of Our Father, Washington, D. C., as follows:

Almighty and most merciful God, our Heavenly Father, trusting in Thy loving kindness and tender mercy, we come into Thy presence and bring Thee our devout offerings. In their day our fathers walked by Thy guidance and trusted in Thy compassion. Still to their children, we pray Thee, be Thou the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, and let Thy blessing rest upon these, Thy servants, gathered for their work.

Especially we invoke Thy blessing upon Thy servant, the Chaplain, in an hour of great and sudden sorrow, and we pray Thee, O God, that Thou wilt send Thy spirit of sympathy and of love and of comfort to that section of our country visited by sudden calamity and affliction. To everyone that is bowed down by anxiety we pray that Thou wilt give the spirit of assurance and trust, and grant that they, and we, and all may understand that the Eternal God is our refuge, and that underneath are the everlasting arms. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House, pending the approval of the Journal, that on Monday's session, which was extended into the calendar day of Tuesday, the Chair held that 191 Members constituted a quorum of the House. Mr. Williamson, of Oregon, and Mr. Patterson, of Tennessee, Members-elect, under the certificates of the governors of their respective States, have not qualified, and the Chair held that they should not be counted to make a quorum. The Chair, in the preparation of the Journal, instructed the Journal clerk to leave their names from the roll that is called. Members understand that, under the statute, from necessity, until organization and qualification under oath, the House organizes itself from the Clerk's roll, but from Jefferson's Manual, as well as sound parliamentary precedents, in the judgment of the Chair, the name of the Member-elect, after the organization and until he has taken the oath, should not be upon the roll from which the yeas and nays are called. Therefore the Chair directed the correction of the roll as it appears in the Journal; and hereafter, in case this Journal shall be approved with the correction just described by the Chair, in calling the roll the names of Messrs. Patterson and Williamson will not be called until they shall have taken the oath, respectively.

Is there objection to the approval of the Journal?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Speaker rule that a Member-elect is not a Member of the House until he is sworn in as a Member of the House?

The SPEAKER. There is in the organization of the House what is known as the "Clerk's roll," and upon that roll the House organizes itself. No doubt it would have the power to organize itself even in the absence of statutory provision, but the whole proceeding is controlled by statutory provision. Now, the House being organized, the yeas and nays are called by virtue of the Constitution. The Chair holds that, the House being organized, the roll should contain the names only of those who have taken the oath.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Chair will pardon me again, is a Member-elect, though not sworn in as a Member of the House, entitled to his mileage and to his salary?

The SPEAKER. A Member-elect draws his mileage and salary by virtue of statutory provision.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry. I understand that in arriving at the number 191 as constituting a quorum the Chair also omits and does not, of course, treat as part of the House two Members who were sworn in, but who have since died.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. Also one who has resigned.

Is there objection to the approval of the Journal? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13103) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the pension appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13103) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
W. P. BROWNLOW,
JOHN A. SULLIVAN,
Conferees on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 13103) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year 1907 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the Senate amendments, namely:

On amendments numbered 1 and 2: Makes the provision with reference to age as a permanent disability read as proposed by the Senate and as follows: "That the age of sixty-two years and over shall be considered a permanent, specific disability, within the meaning of the pension laws."

On amendment numbered 3: Strikes out the following provision, proposed by the Senate, namely: "And provided further, That hereafter in the adjudication of pension claims under the general law the soldier shall not be required to prove the continuance of the alleged disability or disabilities from the date of his discharge from the service to the time application is made for pension or increase of pension, it being sufficient for him to show that the disability was incurred in the service and line of duty, and that it exists at the time of medical examination."

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
W. P. BROWNLOW,
JOHN A. SULLIVAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite catch this. What will be the effect of this?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is the conference report on the bill making appropriations for pensions for the ensuing year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the gentleman moving to do—to concur with the Senate amendments?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The amendments simply specify the minimum age limit at 62 years, so that there shall not be any difference in the ruling of future Pension Commissioners on the subject of age.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the gentleman is seeking to have adopted now by law the Executive order of the President?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Substantially.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the law as the gentleman makes it now differ from that Executive order?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Only in this: It not only makes age a specific disability, in harmony with the Executive order, but it fixes 62 years as the minimum age. Otherwise it stands as named by the President in Order No. 78.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What age did the President fix—62?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That was in the order, but this fixes it so that there shall be no difference in the rulings of future Pension Commissioners.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I understand that we are finally going to put upon the statute books substantially that Executive order?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In substance that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman and the Republican party upon having finally seen the advisability, if not the necessity, of legislating in accordance with the Executive order, although for quite a while we have been proceeding upon the theory that the Executive order without law was sufficient.

Mr. KEIFER. You mean the Executive order of President Cleveland.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean the Executive order, whoever issued it, and which was lately put into operation in a new form by our present reform President.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, at least three Presidents have ruled in spirit the same as President Roosevelt. This fixes the latest ruling in the statute as the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to ask a question. Is it not true that this bill makes age a specific disability? It provides that age shall be the basis of pensions absolutely, and the Executive order referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi only made age prima facie evidence of disability. This legislation and the Executive order do not belong to the same class at all. The Executive order simply provided a rule of proof, a rule of evidence, and this bill fixes a rule of liability on the part of the Government for pensions. Under this bill 62 years of age gives an ex-soldier a pensionable status. Under the Executive order, in the absence of other proof, 62 years of age is only presumptive evidence of disability, but it may be overcome by countervailing evidence. That order was only fixed as a rule of evidence. This makes it a matter of law. So it is not legislating the Executive order into law at all. It is making a new basis for fixing pensions, the age basis. Now pensions are granted only for disability, and under the Executive order a certain age is prima facie evidence of disability. This bill will give a pension on account of age, without regard to disabilities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understood at first we had merely put upon the statute book substantially the Executive order. I now understand from the gentleman from Indiana that whereas the Executive order pronounced that a man was to be presumed to have reached this stage of decrepitude at 62, that presumption could be overcome by proof aliunde——

Mr. KEIFER. Under the order.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). But under this, as proposed to be passed, he is to be taken conclusively to have reached that stage of decrepitude, whether as a matter of fact he had or not or whether you could prove he had or not. If that is the case, it seems to me this is a rather unwise law to put upon the statute book. I would like to ask the gentleman this question upon this subject: How did that subject-matter get to the conferees? What difference between the two Houses was there that led them to settle the difference by putting this legislation upon the report?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The bill as passed in the House declared that age shall be considered a permanent specific disability within the meaning of the pension law. There was a question as to whether there was not some ambiguity in that and that our Pension Commissioners might rule differently from the present one; hence the Senate inserted these words: "The age of 62 years and over shall be considered a permanent specific disability." It was understood by the House, as well as the committee, exactly what is carried in the Senate amendment. It is simply to prevent the possibility of ambiguity in the future construction of the law that the amendment is offered by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman admits that in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Indiana this does make the age, formerly a presumptive proof——

Mr. KEIFER. Under the order.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). To a certain pensionable status now a conclusive proof not to be disputed at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It does just exactly what the House did for the Mexican war soldiers years ago, that when a Mexican war soldier should reach the age of 62 years he should be put upon the pension rolls at $8 a month, regardless of his physical or his financial condition—simply age, and that age was 62 years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood it was 75; but let that go.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; at $8.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know myself. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman for information how much this bill, if it passes, entitles a soldier to receive simply because he is 62 years of age?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. When a soldier is 62 years of age he is entitled because of that age to $6 a month on his application, without examination; when he is 65, to $8 a month; when he is 68, to $10 a month; when he is 70, to a maximum of $12 a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It makes no increase in the rate?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not a bit.

Mr. KEIFER. It follows Order 78.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the difference in this amendment, in substance, to the amendment offered, I think, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] last Congress, whereby he undertook to make, in substance, the order the law of the land? What is the difference in the two?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not recall the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to which reference is made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman will remember that we made an effort over here to make it the law that such and such thing should be done, instead of leaving it to the discretion of the President or anybody else.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It may be so, but I do not recall it. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ANDREW D. WHITE.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I report Senate joint resolution No. 46, to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than members of Congress shall be filled by the reappointment of Andrew D. White, a citizen of New York, whose term expires June 2, 1906.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUBPORT OF SPOKANE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged bill (H. R. 17757) extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a privileged bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same is hereby, extended to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington.

Also the following committee amendment:

Strike out the word "is," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the word "are."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions may have one week in which to submit their views on the bill H. R. 12610—namely, the Jamestown Exposition bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for one week in which to submit the views of the minority on bill H. R. 12610—the Jamestown Exposition bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CUMBERLAND RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14591) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River in or near the city of Clarksville, State of Tennessee, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

TWO BRIDGES ACROSS THE CUMBERLAND RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14592) to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn., with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

CHOCTAW, OKLAHOMA AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate bill, a similar House bill being on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5520) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company the power to sell and convey to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all the railway property, rights, franchises, and privileges of the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905.

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso in section 1 of an act entitled "An act granting to the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company the power to sell and convey to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all the railway property, rights, franchises, and privileges of the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting between the words "selling company" and the words "and all suits" the words "except its mortgage bonds," and that said proviso as amended shall read: "Provided, That said purchasing company shall, by said purchase, be and become liable and assume the payment of all existing liabilities of said selling company, except its mortgage bonds, and all suits now pending against said Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company shall proceed to final judgment the same as if said sale had not been made."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for immediate consideration of the Senate bill.

Mr. SULZER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to——

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to objection.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; then I would like to have some explanation in regard to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to know what this bill does.

Mr. CURTIS. The bill amends the second proviso of section 1 of a bill which became a law in 1905. That bill as it was amended in the Senate made the purchasing company assume the mortgage of the selling company. This mortgage is fully secured by the railway property, franchises, etc. This bill makes the purchasing company take the property subject to the mortgage, and makes it assume the payment of all other liabilities.

Mr. SULZER. Does this bill relieve the railroad company of any liability?

Mr. CURTIS. It does not relieve the railroad company; it simply leaves the mortgage bonds as they now are, secured by a first mortgage on all the railway property, rights, franchises, and privileges, and the company in making the purchase takes that property subject to the mortgage.

Mr. SULZER. On the explanation just made I shall not object.

The Senate bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House bill on the same subject lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RELINQUISHMENT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE STATE OF MONTANA.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 17135.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17135) providing that the State of Montana be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof.

With Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if this amendment is not in substance a bill now pending before the House?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will say to the gentleman that the House passed a bill making this provision applicable to the lands selected by the State of Montana. The Senate amendment extends it to a specific part of the area of the reservoir site. It passed the Senate unanimously, was considered in the Committee on Public Lands informally this morning, because it was on the Speaker's table, and by the unanimous direction of the House Committee on Public Lands I was authorized to call it up in order to expedite its consideration and ask for concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this not a bill which should go to the Committee on Arid Lands?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. This bill allows the construction of a reservoir site on the public lands, including some lands which had heretofore been entered. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, which has had this bill under consideration.

Mr. LACEY. This irrigation scheme does not come under the terms of the reclamation act; it is under what is known as the "Carey Act."

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

BONDS AND OATHS OF SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4339.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4339) to amend section 4502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to bonds and oaths of shipping commissioners.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4502. Every shipping commissioner so appointed shall give bond to the United States, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, for a sum, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, of not less than $5,000, in such form and with such security as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall direct and approve; and shall take and subscribe the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes before entering upon the duties of his office: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any respect the liability of principal or sureties on any bond heretofore given by any shipping commissioner."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what is the effect of this bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Under the original statute these commissioners were appointed by the circuit courts, and the circuit courts approved their bonds. Later the appointment was transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, and yet the circuit courts approved the bonds. Now, by statute the appointment is made under the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the provision is simply that the Department of Commerce and Labor shall approve the bonds.

Mr. SULZER. Is that the only difference?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the only difference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF ENROLLMENTS AND LICENSES OF VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16133) to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to consolidate into one document in the case of any vessel of the United States of 20 net register tons or over the form of enrollment prescribed by section 4319 of the Revised Statutes and the form of license prescribed by section 4321 of the Revised Statutes, and such consolidated form shall hereafter be issued to a vessel of the United States in lieu of the separate enrollment and license, now prescribed by law, and shall be deemed sufficient compliance with the requirements of laws relating to the subject.

SEC. 2. That section 4325 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read:

"SEC. 4325. The license granted to any vessel shall be presented for renewal by indorsement to the collector of customs of the district in which the vessel then may be within three days after the expiration of the time for which it was granted, or, if she be absent at that time, within three days from her first arrival within a district. In case of change of build, ownership, district, trade, or arrival under temporary papers in the district where she belongs the license shall be surrendered. If the master shall fail to deliver the license he shall be liable to a penalty of $10, which shall not be mitigated."

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to amend any law now in force concerning the compensation of officers of the customs for service connected with the enrollment and license of vessels.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect on and after January 1, 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if the bill has been unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The object of the bill is to simplify the documenting of ships. At present it is required that they shall have three papers—a register, an inspection certificate, and an enrollment. This paper is recommended for the purpose of simplifying and lessening the expense of the proceeding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10129) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4952) making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1691. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Shepard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1692. An act granting a pension to Ellen H. Swayne—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1013. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Odear—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 556. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Egolf—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3405. An act authorizing the payment to the Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane of pay due to persons in the Navy or Marine Corps under treatment at that institution—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 1728. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Allen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3415. An act granting an increase of pension to William Triplett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3549. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha H. Ten Eyck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5337. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Tow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5340. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura Hentig—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 5366. An act granting an increase of pension to John Beatty—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5515. An act granting an increase of pension to Matilda C. Frizelle—to the Committee on Pensions.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8997) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with sundry Senate amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the Senate amendments ought to be read. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, and Mr. MEYER.

IRRIGATION ACT IN THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 14184 be laid before the House as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title, be laid before the House as unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 14184) to extend the irrigation act to the State of Texas.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to my colleague, Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in 1902 Congress passed what was known as the "reclamation act," an act to provide for the irrigation of public lands of the United States. It was the unanimous desire of the people of the western part of the United States to be benefited by the irrigation of public lands that this bill should become a law. The State of Texas was not included in the bill and will receive none of the benefits to be derived from the act, and the purpose of this bill it to extend the act to our State. There is west of the one-hundredth meridian in the State of Texas about two-fifths of the State, an area of good irrigable land greater in magnitude than any other State or Territory in the United States contains. It was thought at the time the bill was passed that if Texas were included in the act that it would possibly prevent the passage of the bill, and the Members of this House from Texas voted unanimously for the bill, leaving out their own State, because we did not desire to jeopardize the passage of the bill at that time. I introduced a bill in last Congress and also in this Congress to extend the irrigation laws over Texas.

It is a fact well established and well known that in the State of Texas we have quite a lot of territory that can produce cotton and rice, and these staple crops can not be produced in any other territory in the United States that is subject to the irrigation laws, and for that reason the passage of this bill will add greatly to the material wealth of this country, and thus it will benefit the entire people of the United States, and for that reason we should extend the act to that State.

Mr. Speaker, the platform of both political parties, before the irrigation law passed, recommended the passage of the act, and thereby declared in favor of the irrigation of the arid lands of the United States. Our State is in that same arid belt, and Texas extends farther west than either Oklahoma or Kansas and as far west as the eastern half of New Mexico. We have as arid land there as you will find anywhere in the United States. I speak of that portion of the State west of the Pecos River. All this part of Texas in the southern part of the arid belt of the United States, and can, as I have stated, produce cotton and rice by irrigation, while the rest of the land that can be irrigated can produce neither of these crops. Therefore we will not come in competition with the persons raising ordinary crops on other portions of the land irrigated under the act of 1902.

The objection urged against this bill by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], is that Texas reserved her public domain when she went into the Union as a State, and that she has no public lands to sell in order to help increase this fund.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I can understand the theory of the general irrigation law, because the Federal Government uses the fund for reclaiming the land and making it valuable, but what authority has the United States Government to undertake the reclamation of land that is worthless because of its arid condition or worthless because it is partially overflowed, land that belongs to the State or a private individual? What authority has the Federal Government to go into the business? Why shouldn't it come over into Indiana and reclaim the swamp lands the title of which is in private individuals?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can better answer the gentleman by quoting the gentleman who is at the head of the Reclamation Service of the United States. I will also answer by that statement the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. I read from a letter from Charles D. Walcott, Director of the United States Geological Survey, who is at the head of the Reclamation Service, written last year to the irrigation congress assembled on the 21st day of August in the city of Portland. I read as follows:

Among the principles thus far developed that may aid in shaping the policy of the future, four may be mentioned here.

a. The money resulting from the disposal of public lands belongs to the nation and not to the community.

Mr. Speaker, if this is true then Congress has the right to use these funds for the purpose of redeeming the arid (only) lands in any part of the United States.

That is a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr LACEY], and also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. While the money resulting from these lands belongs to the nation, it must be used for national purposes. The gentleman is asking now to take Federal money and use it for local purposes in his own State of Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are not asking that; but we are asking that it be used on all of the arid land found in Texas, as well as elsewhere. Already millions of dollars have been expended under the irrigation law of 1902, and there is now between twenty-eight and thirty millions of dollars available for the building of these dams and ditches in the West. The irrigation of these arid lands by the Government is an accomplished fact, and it is too late now to question the wisdom of that law. We only ask that it be extended to our State.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HOGG. From what source will your water be derived?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the gentleman has asked that question. All of the water that will be used by Texas under this bill comes from New Mexico and Colorado, the Rocky Mountain watershed. The Pecos River and the Canadian River, I will say to the gentleman, do not touch the State of Colorado, but rise in New Mexico. The Rio Grande rises in Colorado, in the gentleman's State, but the water derived from that river will not benefit Texas by this bill in any respect. The Fifty-eighth Congress passed a bill providing for the irrigation of the arid lands on the Rio Grande River, both in New Mexico and Texas, and no other project can be put on foot on the Rio Grande River in Texas.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to state he expects to take the water from the Rio Grande.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not at all. I will state to the gentleman that this can not affect the Rio Grande further than has already been effected by the bill I have just mentioned, which was passed by the last Congress.

Mr. HOGG. Does it take water from any of its tributaries?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will not, except the Pecos River, and that does not rise in the gentleman's State, and if it does take it from the Pecos River, Colorado will not be in any way affected by that fact.

Mr. HOGG. It is not a question of where it rises. The point I am making is this: Will the gentleman not meet the same trouble with the Interior Department that we in Colorado have in attempting to construct reservoirs in the San Luis Valley? The Department has held that up and will not permit these reservoirs to be constructed, because of some treaty rights that might be invaded as between old Mexico and the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the Department is wrong in that, unless Colorado is seeking to use more than her share of the water in the Rio Grande River. This act, if passed, can not affect the State of Colorado in any way.

Mr. HOGG. What I am asking is whether the gentleman has interrogated the Department?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me it would be impossible to go at length into this matter. I would simply state that the President of the United States in his recent message has recommended the passage of this bill, that the irrigation congress, of which I happened to be a member, at its twelfth and thirteenth annual meetings has recommended the passage of this bill, and there were as members of that congress men from the State of Iowa, men from the State of New York, and it was the unanimous vote of that congress that this bill should pass and that the reclamation act should be extended to the State of Texas. These reclamation funds are refunded. They can be used for only ten years, and it only amounts to a loan of the amount of money in each one of these projects for ten years and then the people who use the funds have to return them to the General Government. They get them without interest and that is the only benefit there is. It is loaned to them for ten years without interest. The Reclamation Service requires mortgages and contracts to be placed upon every foot of the land under these ditches, so that within ten years the full amount of the money will be refunded to the Government. Texas proposes to bring herself within the terms of that law, and I would state that we changed our constitution two years ago so as to get the benefit of this act. The constitution of the State of Texas did not permit a homestead to be mortgaged, until two eyars ago, for any purpose. We changed the law so that it can be now mortgaged and this money can be refunded. The husband and wife can join in the mortgage for the purpose of getting money to place their land under these projects and there is no reason, when the irrigation congress recommends it, when the President of the United States recommends it, when the Irrigation Committee of this House recommends it, and when everybody—persons who have investigated it—recommends it, why it should not become a law.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LACEY. I desire to be recognized against the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield the floor?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. For the present. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to oppose a proposition that the gentleman from Texas seems to have so much at heart, but I think if the House will consider the proposition, the manifest injustice of the proposed bill will be sufficiently obvious to insure its defeat. Texas is the only State that came into the Union without in any way participating in the public domain to begin with. She came in as a republic, not as a Territory. She came in clothed with the ownership of all of the public buildings, of the various docks, and also of all of the public land within her borders at the time of her acquisition as a part of the territory of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman to say Texas came into the Union without any right to participate in the benefits of the public domain?

Mr. LACEY. I say Texas came into the Union without taking part in the public-land scheme in this, that she absolutely reserved to the ownership of the State every foot of public land in the State, every acre of it, and therefore I say that practically excluded her from the benefit of the land laws, because all the land in the State of Texas was held by the State and not subject to national control, and therefore she did not participate in the public-land grants until finally when the agricultural college bill was passed she was then granted 180,000 acres of the public domain outside of the State of Texas, and now receives $25,000 annually from the public lands sales under the agricultural-college act.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if Texas was not permitted to retain her public domain to pay her public debt, which was enormous at that time?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and the Government afterwards paid her debt for her or furnished the money to do so. The gentleman is anticipating me. I think the gentleman himself, if he listens to my remarks through in patience, will agree with me that there is absolutely no merit whatever in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did not Texas become a part of the United States by virtue of annexation, and if she did become part of the United States why do you limit her right?

Mr. LACEY. Because she limited the right of the United States. For instance, we will take the State of Missouri, and I commend to the attention of my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] this fact.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LACEY. I will have to take some time myself, before I yield, to define my proposition. When the State of Missouri was admitted, one section out of every thirty-six was given to the State of Missouri. When Texas came in thirty-six sections out of thirty-six were retained in the State of Texas. That is the difference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman a question—of course it is not my fight.

Mr. LACEY. I think it ought to be the gentleman's fight.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I am on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. I hope not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did not Texas give to the United States Government enough land north of the present Texas line to make a State or two?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; Texas sold at $25\frac{1}{2}$ cents an acre more than 60,000,000 acres of land, much of it for more than it is worth to-day, and sold it to the United States Government, and the United States paid Texas $16,000,000, principal and interest; $10,000,000 of principal and $6,000,000 of interest.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion here? I know he wants to be accurate in his statement.

Mr. LACEY. I intend to be accurate in my statement.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I know you do. You say Texas reserved her land herself. Is it not a fact in the adjustment of affairs between the Republic of Texas and the United States that the Congress of the United States itself by a joint resolution reserved to Texas all of her public domain?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is set out in section 7 in the joint resolution in regard to annexing Texas.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes. There was no impropriety in Texas keeping all her land, none whatever. She owned this land and came to us as a full-fledged republic. I believe to-day that Texas is the greatest State south of Mason and Dixon's line. I used to say, if I had the choice between taking all of the Southern Confederacy and Texas, I would regard Texas as the more valuable piece of property of the two. It is a great State, a wonderful State, and a State we all admire. I like the State and I like her people.

Down in Mexico, there is a saying among the people there, that they could whip the United States if it were not for Texas. They regard Texas as invincible, and as worth more money than all the balance of the United States put together. So that there is no need of charity when you come to Texas. Whatever she gets under this proposition she ought to get as a matter of right. I admire her; I respect her; I do not propose to say or do anything that is unjust to her, but I want to get at the facts. If this House knows the facts and then thinks Texas is entitled to have this privilege, all right; if it wants to make an exception to the rule that governs in Wyoming, Colorado, and California, it is for the House to say it, and I will have done my duty when I shall have explained and called attention to the situation. Mr. Speaker, I see several gentlemen rising and I shall decline to yield for the next ten minutes.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman one question for information. Conceding all that you claim, that Texas came into the Union——

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman does not know what I have claimed, and I shall have to decline to yield.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. When Texas came into the Union she retained all her own public domain, and then came into the Union on an equality with the other States.

Mr. LACEY. She did not come in on an equality; she came in on an inequality. She added nothing to the public domain. She kept all she had.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Let me finish my question. Was there any reservation which prevented the State of Texas from participating in the general public domain that belonged to all of the States generally?

Mr. LACEY. Only thus far, Mr. Speaker, that when the other States came into the Union, they came in with all the public domain in those States belonging to the United States. But Texas, when she was admitted, reserved all the land to the State of Texas. Therefore she did not come in on an equality, but with an inequality, and the inequality was greatly in her favor. She kept thirty-six thirty-sixths of all her lands, and the others east of the Missouri only got one thirty-sixth. The States west of the Missouri River got two thirty-sixths. Texas came into the Union with an express agreement on her part, accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States, that she should retain all this public land. She had, however, a flexible, indefinite, and undefined boundary, and that uncertain boundary was one of the causes of the war with Mexico. She realized the importance of having an elastic boundary; a sort of elasticity that reached out into New Mexico, into Kansas and into Colorado. That dispute was settled in 1850 by Congress paying her in bonds and in money that amounted, when the interest was paid on it, to $16,000,000. With that money she could pay off her debts, and I understand did so. The Government paid all her debts and left Texas the land, and she has I think about 3,000,000 acres of land yet. We have appropriated all of the proceeds of the public land and the other lands to irrigation in sixteen other States and Territories, and Texas now asks to share with the other States under the reclamation act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman wants to be fair; let me make a suggestion to him.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman can do so in his own time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We gave 20,000,000 acres to the Southern Pacific Railroad in order to build its line.

Mr. LACEY. You gave land to build the Southern Pacific Railroad. The State of Texas gave the right of way across the land to the Southern Railroad. Texas had the right to give land to build a railroad through the State of Texas, and she gave lands to build the capitol, and she also sold her lands for cash. Texas is in as good financial condition to-day as any State in the Union. The State is absolutely now in a position to neither ask nor accept charity.

Mr. BURLESON. And it will not do it.

Mr. LACEY. And it will not do it. It can not afford to press this bill. I certainly think that the sixteen gentlemen representing that State here ought to stand up and vote against this proposition to take money away from Colorado, California, and Arizona and spend it in the State of Texas. I will tell you how far I am willing to go as far as Texas is concerned. We passed, a year ago last February, a bill for an irrigation scheme on the Rio Grande. Why? Because the Rio Grande was an international river, because it was an interstate river, and we passed a bill providing that if the irrigation authorities found that the money could be made safe for subsequent return upon the scheme they were authorized to include the Rio Grande proposition in Texas in the irrigation scheme. There is one other proposition, the Pecos River, which makes its rise in the Territory of New Mexico and runs into Texas, which could not be satisfactorily handled without having both regions considered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Canadian River also.

Mr. LACEY. I will not yield to the gentleman and can not yield for at least ten minutes. Now, then, there is the Pecos. It will be perfectly proper under the same principle laid down in the Rio Grande scheme to give Texas the benefit of a joint arrangement with the Territory of New Mexico or the new State of Arizona, whichever it may be, to have an irrigation district there of an interstate character. I should favor such a bill, because I want to be fair to Texas; but when we passed this bill a year ago we let the camel's head in the tent, and now Texas is humping herself and trying to get her whole body in. She proposes to do it without adding one dollar to the irrigation fund. She proposes to come in under the irrigation law of 1902, which provides that 51 per cent of all the money received for lands in each of the sixteen States and Territories named shall be expended in those States and Territories, and the other 49 per cent might be expended by any other State or Territory, and it provides also that within ten years there shall be such a readjustment as will get back from the State or Territory in which this money is expended the 49 per cent less the proceeds of whatever public lands go into the work from that State or Territory. Now, Texas would be entitled to 49 per cent, and she has to pay that back in ten years out of the sale of the public domain in her territory, but there is none to sell. It is all State land. Now, if that is not a charity it resembles it so much as to make my Texas friends just a little inclined to blush.

In 1850 there was passed what was known as the "Arkansas swamp land act." It provided that all the swamp lands of the United States should be conveyed to the various public-land States; and I invite again to the attention of my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that under the Arkansas act all the swamp lands in Missouri were conveyed to Missouri, and all the swamp lands in Iowa were conveyed to Iowa, for the purpose of reclamation, and the States assumed the burden of reclamation. From time to time through many years the States having arid lands have asked some sort of relief.

We passed a bill known as the "Carey Act," which gave every arid State the right to select a million acres of desert land, or not to exceed a million, for an irrigation district within its borders. Some of the States have made this selection. Propositions have been made from time to time to convey all of the arid lands to the States—the same as we did the swamp lands—but knowing the ill success of the swamp-land grant and knowing the result did not meet the expectations of anybody and that the land when coveyed to the State was not reclaimed, but passed out of national ownership into the control of the State, where it was sold, much of it for a song, this plan for conveying these arid lands to the State has not met with much favor. The national irrigation plan was then considered. Sixteen States and Territories got together and presented a bill to Congress by which the proceeds of the sales of all the public lands in all of those sixteen States and Territories should go into a reclamation fund. Texas was not included in the sixteen. Why? Because she did not have any land to put into the proposition. There is no land within her borders belonging to the United States. She has millions of acres of public land which she was keeping, and these gentlemen propose still to keep it. They would spurn any proposition now for an amendment to this bill to have Texas, in order to get the benefits of this law, cede to the United States her remaining public lands. They would not make such cession.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman let me make a suggestion there?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. While Mr. Newell and these gentlemen from the West were conferring about the matter, I desire to say I met with them at frequent intervals and cooperated with them in order to bring about this national enterprise, as I consider it.

Mr. LACEY. My friend was looking further ahead then than anybody was expecting him to do. He pleads guilty now. When the bill was passed to the effect that 51 per cent should be used in the States where it was raised and the other 49 used elsewhere—but which must be paid back in ten years—he had his weather eye out for 49 per cent for Texas, even that long ago.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me?

Mr. LACEY. Now, I give my friend credit for his astuteness.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I was only anticipating the homesteaders that would come into Texas from Iowa, and trying to take care of them.

Mr. LACEY. Iowa has sent to Texas a great many good men, and we may send her more of them. Texas is a good State. You are not needing this help. You have 3,000,000 acres of land to-day.

When the constitution of 1876 was adopted in the State of Texas she had a public domain equal in area to the entire State of Colorado. Every foot of it belonged to the State, and she has made good use of it in the main. I think it would have been better for her if she had thrown it all open under the homestead law absolutely instead of selling any of it. But the growth of the State of Texas is perhaps an adequate answer to that. She has grown in spite of the fact that she did not have the benefits of the general public-land laws. I believe if Texas had not retained her land at the time of her admission, instead of having to-day a population of only three or four million people she would now have 10,000,000 souls. She will ultimately have 10,000,000 population, and maybe 20,000,000, in spite of the mistake of retaining her public domain, because it will finally pass into the hands of settlers. Nothing can permanently hurt a country that has a good soil, and Texas has a good soil.

So that, Mr. Speaker, this proposition now is to reverse the policy of the reclamation law. It is a proposition not to consider the States in which the public land to be reclaimed is located as having the right to the fund, but to put it elsewhere.

Let me say to the gentlemen of the arid States who are in favor of reclamation that this bill has invited a proposition to drain the Dismal Swamp, to take the proceeds of this land that Texas is asking and put them in North Carolina instead. It has invited a proposition to drain the private farms of Red River of the North. It has invited a proposition for the draining of Minnesota, notwithstanding the fact that all the wet land in Minnesota was long ago given to the State to drain it, under a contract that the State would drain it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does not that apply simply to the lands of the United States in Minnesota?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but the lands of the United States in Minnesota these gentlemen claim belong in part to Texas. My friend is losing sight of what we are discussing here just now. Texas says she wants equality, namely, an equality in what we have left, but at the same time preserving an inequality by keeping all that is within her own borders.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question now?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I want some information on the proposition you started out with, that the public lands of the United States belong to some of the States, and that the other States have no interest in them.

Mr. LACEY. I did not start out with that proposition.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Because Texas came in as a republic and retained her own private domain, your argument is that Texas does not participate in the enjoyment of the benefits of the public lands of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. Texas has made herself an exception under the act by which she came in. She was made a voluntary exception. She has eaten her pie, and she wants still to have it in the other public lands.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. LACEY. Let me say in regard to the gentlemen from Kentucky and Virginia——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Kentucky does not need to be irrigated.

Mr. LACEY. They do a good deal of irrigating in Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. That is a personal matter.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Iowa makes a difference that I am not able to see. Texas, as a republic, retained her own private domain. The United States made no cession.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, it was not a private domain. We bought the land and paid Mexico $20,000,000 for it.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. But that was a contract and there was a quid pro quo.

Mr. LACEY. Then we paid Texas $16,000,000 more for what we bought of her. That was added to the national public domain.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That was the private property of the State of Texas. Now, suppose the State of Kentucky does not have any State capital, and suppose that the State of Iowa has a capital worth $10,000,000. How does that affect the right of the State of Iowa or the right of the State of Kentucky to participate in the proceeds of the public lands or the irrigation of the public lands?

Mr. LACEY. My friend invites me into a discussion that would be a delightful one to me, and which would interest the gentleman from Kentucky, namely, the origin of the public domain. Let me say to the gentleman that the public domain was not the child of the Constitution, but the father of it. When Maryland held back and refused to come into the Union, she withheld her consent until the various other States that had a public domain put it into the common property.

Maryland had no public land.

The public domain was once a more vital subject of interest than at present.

But there are 800,000,000 acres of public lands remaining, and the subject is still one of great importance.

The first essential to the prosperity of any country is that there should be a good title to the soil. I wish to recall to your minds a few of the complex circumstances out of which the present perfect title of the great Northwest has grown. There were many real-estate puzzles, growing out of the vague geography and the wild prodigality with which the royal British family dealt with these provinces, which they neither understood nor in fact held. They distributed it with a vague and reckless profusion, placing overlapping grants, which necessitated almost endless trouble for other people long after the grantor and grantees had gone to that land where there are no land-title problems.

James I in 1606 made the first grant to Virginia, which ran from the Atlantic west and northwest to the Pacific Ocean. No one knew the distance, but there was no doubt that the great ocean was somewhere in that direction. Then came the Massachusetts grant of 1620, also running from sea to sea. On April 23, 1662, Charles II, who had not long before been a fugitive in France, granted to the Connecticut Company a charter and land grant "in New England, in America, bounded on the east by the Narragansett River, commonly called 'Narragansett Bay;' on the north by the Massachusetts Plantation; on the south by the sea, and in longitude as the line of the Massachusetts colony running from east to west—that is to say, from the Narragansett Bay on the east to the South Sea on the west, including all islands thereunto adjoining." This of course was a good grant, as far as Charles held title, but the claims of the Most Christian King of France intervened in the far West, the settlements and rights of the Dutch on the Hudson cut the grant in two in part, whilst the overlying grant made in 1681 to William Penn by Charles II afterwards also cut Connecticut in two on the south, and in 1664 the British King gave to his "dearest brother, James, the Duke of York, his heirs and assigns," the territory which is now principally occupied by the State of New York. James had already acquired the previous grant made in 1635 to the Earl of Sterling. The French did not discover the Mississippi until May 17, 1763, so that the grant of Connecticut by nearly a year antedates the French claims to Louisiana. The French in the north were trappers, the Spanish in the south were gold seekers, but the English were settlers.

It is always interesting to discuss what might have been, but it is almost unthinkable to consider the northern part of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois as constituting a part of the State of Connecticut in the light of subsequent history. But there was a complex variety of things which brought about the present configuration of the great State of Illinois and the transfer of the land on which Chicago stands to the National Government by the State of Connecticut. New York had a shadowy claim in the days of the Revolution to parts of Ohio and Virginia. Maryland refused to enter the Confederation of the Revolution on the ground that the northwest country should be ceded to the united colonies as a whole, but she still joined hands with her sisters in doing her best to make the struggle for liberty a successful one. It was not, however, till 1781 that she finally became an actual part of the Confederation. It was fortunate that there were so many conflicting charters and claims in the Northwest, thus adding to the reasons for nationalizing the public lands.

New York's claims were very shadowy, and rested upon very slight foundations, but her unconditional conveyance of these claims to the National Government paved the way for the action of other States. Virginia had fortified her paper title by the successful expedition of Gen. George Rogers Clark.

The peace of 1783 involved France and Spain as well as England. But Jay, Franklin, and Adams so managed it as to save the great Northwest, including the unknown wealth of Lake Superior in iron and copper.

It was a keen negotiation, but the decision opened up the great possibilities of the Northwest, to be followed by the Louisiana purchase in 1803.

The treaties of 1763 and 1783 made the Mississippi our western boundary and marked the western limits of Connecticut.

A special Federal court met at Trenton, N. J., by authority of Congress, and tried the issue between Pennsylvania and Connecticut. It located the west line of Pennsylvania where it now is, but left Connecticut to claim the ancient boundaries as far west as the Mississippi River.

Massachusetts asserted her claims to much of the land now occupied by Michigan and Wisconsin. Massachusetts conveyed her title April 19, 1785; Virginia, March 1, 1784. New York made her cession March 1, 1781. Georgia made a pretty close bargain with the Government for the transfer of her western claims to the Mississippi, but Connecticut granted her lands, with all of the possibilities of Chicago in the future, on September 14, 1786. She reserved, however, 3,250,000 acres in northern Ohio, "the Connecticut Western Reserve," of which she afterwards sold the soil, and subsequently ceded the sovereignty to the National Government. This last was done in order that a perfected title might be given to the Connecticut Company, to which she had granted the western reserve.

But the future Chicago's troubles were not yet at an end. Wisconsin wanted the north fourteen counties of Illinois, and these counties, including Cook, seemed quite willing to leave Illinois. Wisconsin unwillingly gave up a few hundred square miles in Ohio, including the present Toledo, and took instead the northern peninsula, with the richest iron and copper mines on the planet.

The questions were viewed in the most practical way by our ancestors. "Better an acre in Middlesex than a principality in Utopia."

It is wonderfully interesting to look over the chain of title which opened up the great Northwest in the form in which it now appears upon the map of the States. The ordinance of 1785, simplifying surveys and providing the present method by sections, townships, and ranges, was one of the most important steps toward the settlement and growth of that region.

The Connecticut Western Reserve surveyed its townships in squares of 5 miles instead of 6, but the system was the same. In Europe land was entailed and progress halted a thousand years. In swift-moving America land is as transferable as a horse or a bale of goods. The man who has it is not required to keep it, and, with rapid and easy transfers, lasting improvements have speedily been erected. There is no bar to human progress like a refractory land title.

Perfect titles, simple surveys, easy transfers, secure and recorded, prohibition of entailment—these are elements that seem to us so commonplace that it is difficult to realize how important they have been to our national growth.

When the first currents that set from Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Virginia were lost in the great ocean of national unity, then came the public domain. Wise laws opened the way to utilize the rich soil and healthful climate for the homes of a free people. Individual ownership, stimulating individual effort, was the inspiration of the settlement of the great Northwest.

A few years ago the Turkish Government brought forward an ancient claim, two hundred and fifty years old, by which it was proposed to take for the Crown the lands surrounding the city of Joppa. Private owners began to allow their property to go to decay. They quit watering the orange trees, and the country was threatened with ruin. The claim was abandoned, or the land would have returned once more to its mother, the desert.

Before the white settlements in America the title was held by the Indians in common. A number of misguided gentlemen to-day are urging the seizure of all lands through the proposed medium of a single tax. They claim to have something original in this proposition, but it is not; it is aboriginal. It was not only necessary to provide for good surveys and titles, but a free government, administered by free men, was even more essential.

The ordinance of 1787 provided a system out of which has grown all the subsequent territorial organizations in the United States. The old Northwest, bounded on the west by the Mississippi and on the south by the Ohio, was larger than France and larger than either the Austrian or German Empire.

The political jurisdiction of the remote States on the seashore would have been a great handicap to the growth of the new country. Religious freedom, exclusion of negro slavery, the reservation of each sixteenth section for school purposes were the great forces in the ordinance of 1787. This ordinance was not only a landmark in our history, but was a turning point in the history of civilization. The main features of the ordinance and of our national Constitution, which was also made in 1787, now seem so natural and reasonable that it is hard to realize the time when the principles of these two great charters were not recognized by all mankind.

The cession of this great western empire to the nation at large was essential to the adoption of the Constitution itself.

The Englishman, it is said, always has a "hunger for the horizon," which is another way of expressing the thought that land hunger is a characteristic of the race to which we belong. It is a chronic condition of the Anglo-Saxon.

In 1763 Great Britain very seriously discussed the propriety of giving up Canada to France and taking Guadeloupe, including all the little islands around it, in exchange. Doctor Franklin wrote a pamphlet of fifty pages to prove that Canada was worth more than Gaudeloupe. Franklin's argument prevailed, and in 1764 France surrendered all claims east of the Mississippi River to England, and soon after all west of the river to Spain.

I will not follow up in this discussion the great event of the acquisition of the Louisiana territory, nor our title by discovery and settlement in Oregon and Washington.

The old Northwest is now occupied by Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and a part of Minnesota. Minnesota was only half in the old Northwest Territory, and has been said to be only a half-sister to the other five States of that territory. But the same public-land system has been extended to our other continental acquisitions.

The next great step in relation to our public domain was the free homestead era which began in 1862. This was second only in importance to the ordinances of 1785 and 1787. However much we may criticise the land grants which aided in carrying the railroads to the Pacific coast, it is undoubtedly true that the settlement of the vast empire between the Mississippi and the Pacific was very greatly accelerated by this policy. Another important departure from all previous methods was the adoption of the existing system of administering our public mineral lands.

The old Spanish law, under which the Crown owned all the precious metals, was abrogated, and every inducement is held out to the hardy explorer whose venturesome spirit has led him into almost every part of the far West. Even far-away Alaska, purchased by Seward in 1868 and looked upon as an indirect way of giving $7,200,000 to Russia for her friendship in the civil war, has proven to be one of the richest of all our possessions, and each year that Territory yields us in gold, fish, and furs very much more than the whole of the original purchase price.

We have to-day in the public domain, including Alaska, something over 800,000,000 acres of lands. The best of the agricultural land has passed into private ownership. A system of national irrigation has been entered upon which will make homes for many more millions of our population. Nearly 100,000,000 acres of timbered lands have been set apart as permanent forest reserves, but one of the greatest sources of national wealth has, in my judgment, been greatly neglected. Nearly 500,000,000 of acres of grazing lands still belong to the nation. Most of these lands are unsuited for the making of homes by the old methods. Much of the grass is annual, and if grazed too closely it will produce no crop in the succeeding year. The subject is a very interesting one and, in my opinion, is one of the most important with which this generation has to deal. Some method must be devised by which the grazing may be carried on so as to produce the largest amount of pasturage. To discuss this question as it deserves would occupy more time than is allotted to me and would not be relevant now.

Connecticut once owned the site of the city of Chicago. Suppose this domain had not been conveyed into the general public property. Connecticut would have had Chicago, and Chicago would have had considerable influence in Connecticut politics. Connecticut would have been a kangaroo State, the biggest end of her behind. [Laughter.] Finally Connecticut conveyed her rights, Massachusetts conveyed hers, Virginia conveyed hers, and the Government of the United States assumed all the debts of the colonies as a consideration, took the land and devoted it to the general public use of the settlers. That was the origin of the public domain.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Was not Chicago in the Northwest Territory and given by the State of Virginia?

Mr. LACEY. Virginia claimed it and claimed that General Clark had strengthened that claim by his expedition. I think the record gives the best title to Connecticut. She would have had Chicago, she held the Western Reserve in Ohio, and if she had not yielded that up, to-day she would have been able to point to Garfield's and Mark Hanna's tombs and Tom Johnson alive all in the State of Connecticut. [Laughter.] But the lands were conveyed to the State of Ohio.

Mr. RUCKER. I always heard that it was hard to beat a Connecticut man. How did they beat them out of Chicago?

Mr. LACEY. Chicago wasn't there then; they gave this land to the nation and the Government assumed the debts of Connecticut. Connecticut retained only the Western Reserve in the State of Ohio.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that there were some Kentucky gentlemen who wore coon-skin caps and buckskin breeches who moved up the Ohio line, headed by Clark, and the State of Connecticut never had any title to the territory.

Mr. LACEY. The State of Connecticut got the Western Reserve notwithstanding the coon-skin caps and the buckskin breeches of Kentucky, but Kentucky got a part of the deposit that was received from the National Treasury out of the proceeds of the public domain in 1835. At that time the public domain was a great question. It was the greatest of all questions back in those days. When Texas came in she was wise—Connecticut "wasn't in it" with Texas! The only thing that Connecticut saved out of her territory was the Western Reserve; she gave up Chicago and saved the Western Reserve. But

Texas, keen, cutting Texas, kept it all, kept every acre of it, and now, like Oliver Twist, she is asking for more. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to read to the House one of the resolutions of the annexation of Texas to the United States.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman can read that in his own time. She did reserve it and she had a right to, and because she reserved it she has it yet. And yet she wants the United States to sell land in Colorado and take the proceeds and irrigate that land for her. That is the proposition that is held up for the benefit of the arid States in the Union. I am surprised to note that some Members from the arid-land States seem inclined to vote for the proposition.

Now, if Texas were helpless, if she were poor, if she were not the empire that she claims to be, and I am glad that she is, that might make some difference. They talk about making five States out of her; she is great enough for five States, but the Texans wouldn't divide her under any consideration. In that situation she is not in a position to ask that a few hundred thousand acres of land remaining in Kansas should be sold and a portion of the proceeds spent in Texas for the purpose of irrigation there. Texas should not ask aid of Kansas. Kansas is rich, but Texas should not ask help from that quarter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to read to the gentleman one resolution which shows that Texas was admitted into the Union as one of the original States on equal terms.

Resolved, etc., That the State of Texas shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

Mr. LACEY. I say that that is not correct; that she did not come in on "equal terms" with the other States. Kansas obtained 2 sections out of 36, but Texas retained the whole 36 out of 36.

Mr. BURLESON. Kansas did not retain anything, but the United States gave to Kansas these 2 sections out of 36.

Mr. LACEY. The United States, after it captured Texas from Mexico, gave Texas all of it.

Mr. BURLESON. Captured Texas from Mexico!

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and gave her $16,000,000 afterwards.

Mr. BURLESON. Texas maintained her independence for nine years——

Mr. LACEY. I know it, but that wasn't very long.

Mr. BURLESON. Before it was invited into the Union, and it was the proposition of the United States that Texas retain her lands in order to discharge an indebtedness of over $12,000,000, and no other State was ever admitted into the Union that had any such indebtedness as that, and the equities appealed to the United States.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, my friend gives away his whole case. He says Texas retained the public land because of her debt. She did. That is one of the grounds on which she retained it, and then within five years from that time the United States came forward and paid the debt off for her.

Mr. BURLESON. Paid it off, when Texas gave her a body of land one-half of New Mexico? I think surely that statement made by the gentleman from Iowa must be made inadvertently.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. BURLESON. As a matter of fact, instead of paying off this indebtedness for Texas, Texas conveyed to the United States one-half of New Mexico, more than one-third of Colorado, a part of Wyoming, a part of Kansas, and a part of Oklahoma.

Mr. LACEY. She conveyed her claims to that land.

Mr. KEIFER. I would ask the gentleman from Texas where is the authority for that statement which he has just made?

Mr. BURLESON. Why, every map evidencing the title of the United States to any of the property within her limits.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read from a very interesting volume entitled "Public Domain," published in 1883, which is full of interesting matter:

TEXAS.

Congress, by act of September 9, 1850, made proposals for the cession by Texas of her claim to the territory north of latitude 30° 30′ N., west of the one hundred and third meridian of longitude west from Greenwich and north of the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, and to the Rio Grande River, to the United States. Texas was to relinquish all claims against the United States for any payments or liabilities on the part of the United States for the property of the Republic of Texas, surrendered by the State, which was turned over to the United States at the time of annexation, and the United States proposed to pay to the State of Texas $10,000,000 for such cession in 5 per cent 14-year bonds.

November 25, 1850, the legislature of the State accepted, and by proclamation of the President of the United States, of date December 13, 1850, the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, was announced to be operative and the ceded territory came under the control of the United States.

AREA AND COST OF PURCHASE.

The United States obtained by this cession for the public domain (estimated) 96,707 square miles of territory, being and lying in the following States and Territories:

	Square miles.
In the southwest corner of Kansas	7,766
In the southeastern corner of Colorado	18,000
In the eastern portion of the Territory of New Mexico	65,201
In the public land strip north of the Panhandle of Texas	5,740

Or 61,892,480 acres.

Over all of the above, except the land lying in the "public land strip," and excepting certain grants therein made by the Spanish and Mexican authorities, have the public land laws of the United States, as to survey and disposition, been extended. It cost:

Principal sum, 5 per cent 14-year bonds	$5,000,000
Interest to date of redemption	3,500,000
Act of February 28, 1855	7,500,000
Total	16,000,000

The United States assumed jurisdiction at once upon the acceptance by the State of Texas of the terms offered, and has since retained it.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. I am not through with this other question yet. Mr. Speaker, referring to the map, which is now hanging before the Speaker's desk, and which I have just called for, there we will find the history of this whole transaction. It is the Land Office map and shows the public domain. It is a very interesting history. If one will follow the blue line, indicating the State of Texas, he will find the Panhandle up into the interior. Those were asserted claims, claims of doubtful validity in part, but they were claims nevertheless, and a portion of the claim of Texas was unquestionably valid. The United States passed a law taking from Texas this much of New Mexico [indicating]; this strip above here which runs in Colorado, and a little corner in Kansas, and a portion of the proposed new State of Oklahoma.

Now, Texas also claimed to own Greer County, and, in fact, sold most of it. The Supreme Court recently held that Texas did not own it, and it is in Oklahoma. There has never been anything very modest about Texas. She has been charged with everything except modesty. [Laughter.] I do not blame her for that. There is something fascinating about the bigness, the magnitude, of Texas, where they haul their lumber a thousand miles by rail, all inside of the Lone Star State, from the sawmill to the market; so that I acquit her of any charge of immodesty. They made a claim to pretty near everything in sight in the northwesterly direction.

Mr. BURLESON. And that map seems to concede it.

Mr. LACEY. No; their claim was bigger than shown on this map. This map is much more modest than Texas. This is the amount it is conceded Texas really had some reasonable claim to. It amounted to about 96,000 square miles, and those 96,000 square miles have been ceded to the nation. Most of these acres are deserts. Texas sold the worst she had. It is marvelous, but she did. She reminds me of the story Artemus Ward tells about a conversation overheard by him in Maine. He heard two men talking in a hotel. One of them said to the other, "Well, Bill, I have sold that old mare." "What," says Bill, "that old, flea-bitten, knock-kneed, broken-down, spavined mare?" "Yes." "How much did you sell her for?" "One hundred dollars." "One hundred dollars! Who did you sell her to?" "I sold her to mother." [Prolonged laughter.] "Well," says Bill's brother, "you are a good one."

Now, when Texas was "selling her land to mother" she took the worst land she had and "sold it to mother" for 25 cents and a fraction an acre. There are millions of those acres that would not bring anything like that price now.

Mr. BURLESON. And a son of Connecticut, as President, negotiated the sale, I believe.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; there is no doubt about that. We have been good to Texas, and ought to have been good to her, and she has been good to herself. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. She is a stepchild.

Mr. LACEY. No; she is not a stepchild, and neither is she a mother-in-law. She appears now and asks equality. Equality in what? To keep all she has and divide up with the rest of the States what is left. [Laughter.] That is the "equality" that my friends from Texas ask this House to adopt. She wants to be considered as one not only of the original thirteen States, but as one of the sixteen irrigated States. She wants to do this without putting an acre of land into the proposition and to draw out whatever she can get.

Mr. BURLESON. She has put in 75 per cent of the land that is going to be irrigated.

Mr. LACEY. No; she sold that; sold it to "mother," and sold it at 25 cents an acre.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman two or three questions.

Mr. LACEY. Well, ask only one.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask one at a time. The gentleman bases his whole argument, as I understand it, upon the justice of his position?

Mr. LACEY. No; on the injustice of the proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, that is the converse of the right way of putting it. Now, is it not true that the fact that Texas achieved her independence led to the United States getting all the land that is in New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, and a large part of Utah, Wyoming, and all that other country that is in this controversy?

Mr. LACEY. The war of Texas gave us an opportunity to give $20,000,000 to Mexico for that land, just as the war with Cuba gave us an opportunity to give $20,000,000 for the Philippines.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is not a fair way of stating it. Is it not true the Texas independence performance led to our getting all the land that is in controversy now? Now, that is question No. 1, and I want to ask another——

Mr. LACEY. I am not going into the justice or the injustice of the Texan war. We are not very proud of our position in relation to that war. We were proud of the results, and the results have been good, but Texas had a war with Mexico and we got into it, not because we ought to have done so, but because we wanted to, and so we did get into it, and in consequence we got Texas; we got California; we got New Mexico; we got an empire; but we did not take it away from Mexico without paying for it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did not you answer the question?

Mr. LACEY. Why did not you ask it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did ask it. Did not the fact that Texas achieved her independence lead to our getting all of this land out on the Pacific slope?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; and did not the fact that Adam married Eve lead to all this trouble? [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a very fine piece of wit, but it does not answer the question.

Mr. LACEY. Why does it not? It is a little further back, that is the only difference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask another, if the gentleman will not answer that one. After Texas got into the Union, did she not have her proportional part of property-interest rights in all the lands that the United States Government had that we are fixing to irrigate now?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, undoubtedly. She came in just the same as any other Territory, except for the fact that she took pains to place herself outside the general plan of the public domain by retaining her public domain for herself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, one more question. If she did have the same property rights in this portion of the land out there that is to be under irrigation, as Iowa, Missouri, and the rest of the States had, how does it come to be a matter of justice to shut her out of all the right to participate in this great irrigation scheme?

Mr. LACEY. She is not shut out. She has 3,000,000 acres in Texas that she can put under the irrigation schemes. What we are trying to shut her out of is to shut her out of Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico, Kansas, and——

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman states we have 3,000,000 acres of public land we can put in this irrigation fund. I want to say we have not a foot of unappropriated land in Texas that we can put into this fund or any other fund.

Mr. LACEY. Your constitution will not let you; you have tied yourself hand and foot, and now say, "We adopted a constitution in 1876 that prevents us disposing of this land in this way."

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will permit, not only the constitution will not permit it, but it has been donated long ago to the school fund, university fund, support of eleemosynary institutions, etc., just as the United States disposed of her public lands elsewhere.

Mr. LACEY. Now, after answering the questions, I do not intend to take up the time of the House further. What I wished to do was to attract the attention of the House sufficiently to this matter so that they would know what they were doing, and then if the Members of the House want to grant Texas a share of these funds without her putting a dollar into the scheme they could vote for this bill.

Now, I want the House to understand that I am not opposed to any reasonable specific proposition to cover a specific irrigation scheme that can not be successfully handled by Texas, because it is an interstate proposition. I have voted for the Rio Grande bill. I would also vote for the Pecos proposition, because, although it is giving Texas something really that she is not strictly entitled to, it is, after all, a fair deal, because the two propositions can not be handled well without being treated as interstate propositions.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. LACEY. Here is a proposition now simply to put Texas on the same footing with Arizona, with California, with Idaho, Colorado, North and South Dakota, and to put nothing in in return.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir; I will yield.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman states that Texas does not propose to put anything into this fund. I will ask him if these other States that he names put anything into this fund? Does not this all come from the National Government?

Mr. LACEY. The lands in these other States, instead of being given to these other States, and the States holding it have been held by the general public. They are all open to homestead settlement, subject to cash commutation. There are mineral claims that are patented from time to time. All of the funds arising go into the land fund, and that fund in sixteen States and Territories has been reserved for the irrigation of those States and Territories. Now, why do we reserve from the irrigation fund the State of Minnesota? She had public land. Why was not that put in with the other sixteen States? For the simple reason that there was no arid land to irrigate in that State. If there had been, Minnesota would have been included.

Mr. REEDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. REEDER. Is it not a fact that these public lands were not put in because we could not get the votes for the bill?

Mr. LACEY. That is putting it on high moral grounds. I had hoped that this Congress had passed the bill fairly. There was no agreement about it. I favored the irrigation bill finally, because I believed it to be a good bill. The details were not as I would have drawn them, but I was in hearty sympathy with its purpose. I should have preferred to have taken up specific propositions from time to time.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question for information. After this irrigation is all completed in these States that were contemplated by the original irrigation act and the fund has revolved and has done the work it is intended to do, where does that money go that remains, then?

Mr. LACEY. It goes back into the United States Treasury, and the United States would share in it if any of it ever came back. But it would be subject to be used again for like purpose. How much of it will be returned is another question I did not care to discuss, because I know our irrigation friends are full of hope. They believe a good deal of money will come back. I think the money will come back, when it comes back, out of our rivers and harbors and out of our public lands. No doubt some of it will be paid back, but I have never shared in the opinion that the money put into irrigation will be all repaid by the beneficiaries.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Assuming that it does not come back, let me ask another question. Where would the fund go? If these lands shall be sold off in Texas, if they were sold, would the fund go into the Texas treasury? Does not this differentiate this proposition from the other?

Mr. LACEY. They say it is "equality" for Texas to have this go into its own treasury, and for sales in Minnesota to go into the United States Treasury. On this question of inequality, after we admitted Texas, we gave her $16,000,000, and on this question of equality we discriminated in her favor as against every other new State admitted into the Union. This bill proposes to increase that inequality in favor of Texas. I believe the irrigation law ought to be extended to a few Texan schemes which could be properly called interstate in their character, and involving Texas and New Mexico, and when one of these fair propositions comes up I will vote for it, as I voted for the Rio Grande scheme of irrigation. This bill takes in the entire State of Texas, and puts it on the same footing as New Mexico and Arizona, without any compensation or contribution from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one question about this Rio Grande project. Now, is not the Rio Grande proposition entirely dissimilar from all other irrigation schemes in the United States?

Mr. LACEY. It is the same as any other, except that the location involves international and interstate water.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). In all other schemes the public land directly or incidentally had some benefit as well as that of the private owners. This proposition involves no national public land whatever, and it has not even a corner to stand on.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But this Rio Grande proposition grows out of the fact that old Mexico raised a row because we had taken part of the water that they sought to use and devastated their fields, so they said.

Mr. LACEY. Because of the international character of the proposition it could be best accomplished through national control.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. New Mexico gets the benefit of it instead of Texas.

Mr. LACEY. New Mexico gets more benefit than Texas, because there is more of the land to be irrigated in New Mexico. Texas gets benefit from it, and I am glad she does, but that has no connection with the present proposition. It is an isolated interstate and international proposition, standing on its own peculiar merits.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, unless some gentleman from Texas wants to ask me a further question.

Mr. FIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand he claims that Texas should be excluded from the benefits of this reclamation act by reason of the fact that she ceded none of her lands to the National Government. Now, if you would bring about equality, why should not greater benefits be extended to those States that had ceded a larger amount to the Union than others?

Mr. LACEY. If we were to go out of the States where these arid lands are, I would want to cede it to Virginia instead of Texas. Old Virginia ceded the Northwest to the United States and we paid her debts, but Texas ceded nothing to us but what she got the cash for.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman says he is in favor of an irrigation scheme in Texas when it is interstate in character?

Mr. LACEY. Necessarily so.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that when you reclaim by irrigation any land in Texas it would be irrigated by the waters that come from the great Rocky Mountain range, and it is absolutely impossible to handle it unless under some interstate proposition? That is the reason we ask for this.

Mr. LACEY. The answer to the gentleman from Texas is that in this case of the Rio Grande and one other scheme which is somewhat local in character—that is, the Pecos River—there are peculiar reasons for their support; but if this bill goes through there is no reason why there should not be thirty or forty independent irrigation schemes of the arid parts of Texas maintained and constructed at the expense of the United States Government out of receipts of the sales of public lands in the particular States designated as arid-land States, and which have been under the irrigation law set apart especially for that purpose.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the geographical fact. Perhaps the gentleman has not studied that particular part of Texas.

Mr. LACEY. I have been running a school in geography for the last half hour. We have the map before us.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. In the western section of Texas there is a large area which can not be irrigated except by waters from the great mountain range. Now, if we can have an irrigation plant, practically all, or a majority, at any rate a great amount of fertile land that only needs water to make it profitable, can be brought into cultivation, and unless we can get it through some such proposition as this it will lie in waste.

If, therefore, this bill that was formerly passed in reference to the irrigation matter is extended to the State of Texas, there will be no conflict of authority in the matter, there will be no conflict in the scheme, and everything will work out all right. Texas will get nothing from anyone except what she contributes to the general fund.

Mr. LACEY. That is very pretty in theory——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is it not true?

Mr. LACEY. The streams that rise in northwestern Texas, in Colorado, and New Mexico, that run diagonally through Texas, are susceptible of creating irrigating districts by the score, entirely within the boundaries of the State, where no interstate transactions would be involved. It is true that the water comes from farther up——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman will have an opportunity in his own time. I wish to reserve a little of my own time.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Simply a question.

Mr. LACEY. I want to reserve a little of my time. I have not many minutes remaining. I want to say in conclusion that the House has this question before it, to take another partner into the irrigation scheme, but it must take that partner in without that partner being anything more than a receiving partner. That partner is not to part with anything. It is to share in the benefits and not to be responsible for any of the burdens of the law.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time, which is eleven minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, some time ago, when an effort was made to get up this bill by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] objected. I wondered then why it was, wondered if one substantial reason could be given by him why Texas should not be permitted to participate in the benefits of the reclamation act. I have listened patiently for nearly an hour to the very interesting discussion of the gentleman from Iowa, and I must confess that I am still in the dark, am still wondering if one sound reason will be urged against the pending bill. You heard it stated by my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] that since the reclamation act was passed two national irrigation congresses have assembled—one at El Paso, Tex., the other at Portland, Oreg. These congresses consisted of delegates from all the vast area of our country that is so much interested in this great fund. These gentlemen—members of the national irrigation congress, who have a vital concern in protecting this fund—unanimously adopted resolutions approving the purpose of this measure. I appeal to every thoughtful man here, do you not know that the suggestion that Texas was to participate in it would have been promptly rejected unless it had been founded upon every consideration of sound public policy and based upon substantial principles of right and justice? But the fact that this action was taken by the national irrigation congress weighs nothing with the gentleman from Iowa. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the father of this great reclamation scheme, the senior Senator from Nevada, who conceived the idea and devoted so many years of arduous service in this end of the Capitol to the support of this proposition, and witnessed his labors finally crowned with success, and this prodigious reclamation work undertaken which is to do so much for the arid West, recognizing the fact that this was a broad national policy that should embrace all the arid land of the United States, favors the proposition set forth in this measure. But, of course, this fact does not appeal to the gentleman from Iowa.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, recognizing that the original purpose of the reclamation act was the inauguration of a broad national policy to be pursued with reference to all our arid lands without regard to where they were situated, when his attention was called to the fact by my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Texas] that the arid lands of Texas alone, of all the arid lands of the United States, had not been embraced within the territory to be benefited by this measure, promptly sent a message to the Congress recommending that this act be extended to Texas. Whatever else may be said against Theodore Roosevelt, the President, it can not be charged that in this recommendation he was either narrow or sectional. Of course, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], by his action here, has shown that he has no respect for this recommendation.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the head of the Department and the bureau chief to whom the administration of this act has been intrusted, who have brought to the discharge of their duties a zeal and an intelligence that has excited the wonder and admiration of every person to whose attention it has been brought, and who are rendering a lasting service to all the people within that section of our country affected by this act, cordially approve the purpose of this measure.

But this fact is not persuasive with the gentleman from Iowa. And last, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, made up of Representatives in Congress from every State and Territory that is interested (and whatever may be said of the western Congressmen it can not be said that they are not always keenly alive to the interests of their own section); these gentlemen, who are wide-awake at all times to see that no false step be taken, that the funds set apart for this great purpose be conserved and protected from waste; these gentlemen, whose every thought is to guard jealously and protect this fund from encroachment on the part of those not entitled to participate, have unanimously reported in favor of the proposition set forth in this bill. Yet the gentleman from Iowa insists that they are grievously mistaken as to what was the best thing for them to do. As I have before stated, Texas alone of all the States in the Union has arid lands that are not entitled to participate in the great benefits to be conferred under the reclamation act. Mr. Speaker, why should Texas be thus discriminated against?

It is a fact known to every gentleman within the sound of my voice that the States and Territories which are to be the principal benficiaries under this act are California and Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico. This vast territory was brought within the limits of our territory under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

It is a historic fact, and will not be disputed by any well-informed person, that Texas furnished more soldiers in the Mexican war than any other State in this Union, notwithstanding she was the youngest in the sisterhood of States. These Texan soldiers, cooperating with their valorous comrades in arms from other States, acquired the principal part of the territory to be benefited by the reclamation act. I believe I can say without boasting that Texas and Texan soldiers brought within the limits of this great country nearly all the vast territory that is to be benefited by the reclamation act. More than that, Mr. Speaker, the Lone Star State brought with her in 1845 within the limits of the United States not only the 265,000 square miles embraced within her limits at this time, but, in addition to this imperial domain, Texas brought within the limits of our country more than one-half of what now constitutes the Territory of New Mexico, more than one-third of the present State of Colorado, a part of Wyoming, a part of Kansas, and a part of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, every foot of the territory which I have just defined is participating in the benefits of the reclamation act, and yet the gentleman from Iowa stands here and contends that Texas, the mother, is to be deprived of the right to have an equal participation therein. Understand, gentlemen, that Texas asks this not as a charity, not as a concession, she insists upon it as a right.

If you refuse this request, upon what basis can you justify your action? I contend, upon no substantial ground whatever. The poorest lawyer in this body will admit, and no good lawyer in all this land can be found who will deny, that the proceeds arising from the sale of the public land in the States of this Union belong to all the States. The gentleman from Iowa has charged that Texas, when she came into the Union, retained as her own her public lands. That is true. Texas came into this Union as no other State has come in or will ever come in. When she came in she came by invitation, and named her own terms. Texas did retain her public domain when she entered the Union. She retained it because at the time the invitation was extended to the independent Republic of Texas to enter the Union she owed more than $12,000,000, and the United States of her own accord, proposed to Texas that she should retain her public lands. No other State ever came into this Union under these circumstances. Texas did retain her own lands when she came into the Union. She was pledged by this great Government—yes, she received its plighted faith, voluntarily offered—that she should be admitted upon terms of absolute equality with every other State in this Union.

As I have said, no one denies—in fact, the gentleman from Iowa admits—that the funds arising from the sale of public lands belongs to all the States. A part of this fund has been set apart for the reclamation of the arid lands of the United States. Texas has arid lands. Then, in the name of reason and logic, answer me, why Texas is not entitled to her part of this fund for their reclamation, just as Iowa would be entitled to her portion if she had within her borders arid lands? If Iowa had such lands, Mr. Speaker, no Texan could be found—and I do not hesitate to say it—who would stand here and attempt to block her efforts to secure it.

I submit to gentlemen here now that this fund belonging to all the States is one in which she should participate. Do you propose to go back upon the faith plighted by the Government with Texas that Texas should come in upon terms of absolute equality with all other States?

Mr. Speaker, Texas had the right and has the right now to an interest in every dollar that arose from the sale of the public land within the limits of the State of Iowa, and she wants it—she wants it for her people. Texas stands here to-day—not asking charity; do not mistake our meaning—Texas is here demanding as a matter of right that she be permitted to participate in the benefits of the reclamation act. And for whom? For the people of Texas and for the people of Iowa who are pouring into Texas by the hundreds and thousands. Why, Mr. Speaker, before the next Congressional apportionment Texas will number enough Iowans alone who have taken up citizenship in our State to entitle her to another Representative in Congress. When that time comes, I hope that the splendid State of Iowa will not be forced to a reduction of her representation on this floor, but if that time does come, when that State gives up the Congressman who is of least service to her, if the gentleman who now opposes us will come to Texas, with some radical changes in his views and otherwise, we might consider his claim for the position of Representative for these Iowans who have come to our State. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, not many years ago a distinguished general remarked that if he owned Texas and hell, he would rent out Texas and live in the other place. [Laughter.] At that time there seemed to be a little approval of the suggestion in some quarters, but now everybody is trying to go to Texas and stay away from the other place. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] speaks of the immodesty of Texas in this request. Since listening to his address I would not denominate modesty as his crowning virtue. Now, what is this question? It is regrettable that a great national enterprise should be viewed in a narrow and provincial manner. When you joined the sixteen States mentioned in the original irrigation act of 1902, I am glad to say that I was one on this side of the House who believed in the importance and necessity of this great national enterprise.

This is indeed a national project, and the only suggestion the gentleman from Iowa makes to prevent Texas participating in this fund is that she retained all her public domain when coming into the Union in 1845, and did not donate any of it to the Federal Government. Ah, Mr. Speaker, time after time has this Government sold its public land and donated the proceeds of the sale thereof to States other than those where the lands were situated. Why, sir, in the irrigation act of 1902 5 per cent of this fund is reserved for the purpose of education and given to the agricultural and mechanical colleges of the various States. That 5 per cent is made inviolate by the provisions of this identical act.

In 1787, when Virginia ceded that princely domain, extending far beyond the State of Michigan, when that State was a part of Orange County, Va., when she gave that vast extent of territory, out of which have been carved Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin, was there any thought that the public lands that were contained in those Territories should be given to the people who resided therein or to the States thereafter formed? Not at all! When those lands were sold the proceeds were distributed to the people of the various States and scattered to the four quarters of the Republic. So with the public lands of Georgia and the public lands of North Carolina, Kentucky, and other States. When Texas came into the Union, in 1845, she did it upon the invitation of the Federal Government, and when entering into the sisterhood of States, by the very language of the joint resolution of annexation, she retained her public domain. There was an adjustment of matters between the Federal Government and the State of Texas. The State of Texas had barely 100,000 white inhabitants when she was admitted as a State, and her public debt amounted to $12,000,000. Let me read again the language contained in the joint resolution of annexation in 1845.

Section 2 reads:

> Said State, when admitted into the Union, after ceding to the United States all public edifices, fortifications, barracks, forts and harbors, navy and navy-yards, docks, magazines, arms, armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defense belonging to said Republic of Texas, shall retain all public funds, debts, taxes, and dues of every kind which may belong to or be due and owing to said Republic, and shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits, to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said Republic of Texas, and the residue of said lands, after discharging said debts, be disposed of as said State may direct, but in no event her said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.

There was an adjustment of all questions of property between Texas and the Federal Government. We conveyed to the United States a vast amount of property, and they left Texas her public domain. Again, in 1850, when there was a dispute about the northern boundary line of our State, Texas ceded to the Federal Government a magnificent area, comprising more than one-half of New Mexico, a splendid strip of land running through the very heart of the State of Colorado, a part of the State of Wyoming, a portion of Kansas, and a piece of Oklahoma. We received $10,000,000 for this immense territory of nearly 100,000 square miles—not the true value of the land. When Texas took that amount we were only compromising differences between the Federal Government and Texas. The disputed territory was at that time worth ten times the amount actually received by Texas. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] says that Texas should not participate in the benefits of the irrigation act which was passed in 1902. As I stated a while ago, when it was passed I thought it was a national enterprise and not for the benefit of any particular State in the Union. You have given us part of the money from the sale of your public lands for the benefit of our agricultural and mechanical college and for educational purposes. You donate it to us every year, and still it is true that not one square foot of Texas domain has ever gone to the Federal Government. Texas does not take a narrow view of the question. When the Government was chartering the great trunk railways to run across the continent from ocean to ocean, Texas did not stand back, but in her infancy donated 16 sections of land to the mile of the railroads that were to traverse her domain. She gave to those great arteries of commerce connecting one section of this country with the other vast areas, not with a selfish purpose, but in furtherance of a great national enterprise, for the benefit of all the people of all the State lying between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans.

Now, what is the proposition here involved? It is simply to extend the irrigation law of 1902 to the State of Texas so that Texas may receive the benefit thereof. That law provided for irrigating not only public lands, but in section 5 it provided for irrigating lands of individuals. As a compensation for the right to use the water, the owners of private lands shall give ten notes or obligations of equal amounts, etc., to return the money to the Federal Government at the end of ten years. That is all there is in this bill to-day—to permit Texas to participate as the other States, to borrow a part of this reclamation money for ten years and return it to the Federal Government at the end of that time. You are not donating anything to Texas. We expect to pay back this borrowed money, as the irrigation act of 1902 requires. At this time the total, as I understand, amounts to more than $30,000,000, and yet there are 500,000,000 acres of land yet unsold, out of which great sums will arise and be placed to the credit of the reclamation fund. This fight against the imperial State of Texas is unworthy of the gentlemen from Iowa and New York. When we came into the Union, it was upon equal terms and in good faith. Texas takes her place under the flag to-day as an equal sovereign. We come not as petitioners and beggars. In the proud majesty of our giant strength we only ask for equity and equality. When the arms of this Republic were victorious from the first battle till our common flag waved in glory over the halls of the Montezumas, Texans, greater than any other State in numbers, were there with patriotic purpose to share the fame of all our soldiers. We contributed more soldiers than any other State in that memorable contest. Out of that struggle, brought on by the admission of Texas, the United States acquired a vast empire, embracing California, Nevada, part of New Mexico, Arizona, and parts of other States. Texas furnished the cause that brought the fruits of those victories. We are proud we were the instrument of this princely annexation. So does every State in this Union exult in that glorious achievement. Then let us stand together under the flag of the Republic as equal sovereigns before the law, as joint heirs in the grander destiny yet awaiting our whole country! [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have no sympathy with the criticism that has been indulged in by the gentleman from Iowa against the State of Texas. I am one of those who believe that when the Republic of Texas was admitted as one of the sovereign States of this Union she then and there became entitled to all the rights, benefits, and privileges as a member of this Union. The reclamation act was intended as one great national scheme. The money that is going into the Treasury of the United States to-day and is set aside for the purpose of carrying on this reclamation work is not the money of any one particular State or set of States, but it is the money of the people of the whole United States, and Texas as a member of the Federal Union had the same interest in that fund and she has put that in along with the other States, and it is now being expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to carry on this work. As has been said, there has been an act passed which extended the reclamation law to the Rio Grande Valley. By consultation with the members of the Reclamation Service, who are carrying on this work, I am advised that there is practically no irrigable land in the State of Texas outside of the Pecos Valley, that district which the gentleman from Iowa is willing to join in and have added to the irrigation territory. There may be some other irrigable land, and the Committee on Irrigation, after considering the matter, concluded it was wise to make the bill apply to the entire State, and have unanimously reported this bill. Now, the gentleman speaks considerably about the injustice of giving Texas that which belongs to the States that are covered by this irrigation act. The whole of that land, Mr. Speaker, belongs to the United States, and when the State of Nevada, Colorado, and others ceded certain parts of their public domain to the United States they only ceded to the United States that which already belonged to her.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER].

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I feel pretty safe in making the statement that if this bill is passed it will be a benefit to the citizens of Iowa and every other State in this Union. [Applause.] It seems to me that the view that has been taken by our friend from Iowa is a selfish, narrow view, and based upon a false assumption. It is based upon the statement that this money belongs to the States of Colorado, Nevada, Utah, or States where public lands lie which are sold to make up the irrigation funds. This is not a true statement of the fact. The money belongs to the United States. It is being used in the United States to make homes for citizens of the United States, and it seems to me that it is to the benefit of a citizen of Iowa who wants a home that if by making a few homes over in the State of Texas with this fund and the citizen of Iowa can thus secure a home there for a more reasonable amount than he could otherwise, it will surely justify my claim that the passage of this bill will prove to be an advantage to the citizen of Iowa as well as the citizens of other States. These Representatives of Iowa seem to have been mistaken about this irrigation matter from the first. I remember when we were passing the national irrigation law they were worried a great deal about the question whether in establishing a strawberry bed in New Mexico or a potato patch the effect would be to decrease the value of their land for raising corn, and the gentleman from Iowa who has just spoken classes as desert that part of Arizona and New Mexico turned over by the State of Texas to the General Government when she came into the Union. When these gentlemen wake up to the facts as they exist, they will realize that when those acres are irrigated by this sacred fund they will produce three times as much of value to the acre as any acre that can be found in Iowa.

Mr. BURLESON. And it contains the Cripple Creek gold field.

Mr. REEDER. As I stated previously, this is not State money. That is the falsity of the foundation of this whole contention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Iowa is to use the balance of his time, I would be obliged if he would use it at this time.

Mr. LACEY. I would ask the gentleman from Texas if he intends to move the previous question at the close of his hour?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. LACEY. I yield that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no stones to throw at the State of Texas. Texas is a great State—great in resources, great partially because of the 120,000,000 acres of public lands she had when she came into the Union, and which belong to her, and great because she is a part of the United States—too great to be a mendicant here at the hands of Congress at the expense of the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. We are not in the attitude of mendicants.

Mr. PAYNE. I have only seven minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. I wish to say that we are not in the attitude of mendicants here.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield now to the gentleman from Texas. I would like to do so, but I can not do it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been said that this fund now amounts to $30,000,000. I think that is approximately correct. It is also true that the contracts let upon it amount now to about $32,000,000, as I am informed by an officer who has charge of it. Also that the probable cost of the work now in contemplation will amount to $100,000,000.

Now, it is proposed to turn a part of this fund over to the State of Texas, not simply for the benefit of the people of the State of Texas, not simply to establish homes in Texas, but for the benefit of the great State of Texas. I do not think we ought to go into that sort of business. It is not in the law to-day. It is true that where there are individual ownerships in the arid land districts which are a part of the great scheme of irrigation in these other States that a provision of law has been made by which we can take a portion of the water provided on paying the United States a reasonable sum—one that is fixed for that purpose. But that is not an arrangement with the State of Texas or with any other State. That is an arrangement with the individual owners of that portion of the territory of the United States.

I am opposed to the proposition of turning this sum or any part of it over to Texas for the reason suggested that it belongs to the States. You have got it to divide. Why not divide it among the States according to their population and wipe out the fund and thereby benefit the poor in Texas and the poor in other States equally? I am opposed to it, because it would be a step in the wrong direction, and because it is a bad step in the wrong direction. If you vote this bill, if you inaugurate this principle of giving a portion of the money of the United States to a State for the benefit of public improvement on the land in that State, what excuse will you have when a bill comes along here for draining the great Dismal Swamp in order to furnish homes in some of the Atlantic Coast States? What answer will you have to any of these myriads of schemes that are brought in here to be fastened on to the Treasury of the United States if you vote this bill to-day to the great and rich and prosperous State of Texas? Why should we be asked to give this subsidy? Now, that is outside of the home question. Texas ought to be able to take care of the homes in Texas. We are able to do so in the State of New York. Why, we have been building our great canals in the State of New York, and we do not think of calling upon the Treasury of the United States to pay for the work, although the canals, free to all, benefit half a continent. I invite my friends from Texas to come out into the open, on to the higher ground, and be willing to take for their State a part of the responsibility that belongs to them, take care of their own internal improvements, as they were so anxious within ten days to take care exclusively of the question of quarantine in the State of Texas. You were so manly, you were on such a high plane, you stood up so above the level of your southern brethren in that respect, why not stand there to-day? Why come here as a suppliant, why come here with a hat passed around for a contribution from the Treasury of the United States? Withdraw your bill. Do not ask the people of the United States in one breath to allow you to regulate your quarantine, and to refuse with disdain the aid of the National Treasury to keep yellow fever out of the United States, and in the next breath come into the Congress of the United States and ask them to develop the wonderful domain that belongs to your State in fee simple.

Do not ask the Congress of the United States to drain this poor reclamation fund in order to simply benefit the treasury of your own State. I am against doing it as a gratuity; I am against doing it as a loan; I am against all this sort of thing of benefiting the public property of any State out of the Treasury of the United States. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this debate is a very excellent illustration of how much ado may be raised over a comparatively small matter. After this discussion never let it be again stated that the House does not carefully consider even minor and relatively unimportant legislation. Those of us who from the beginning have been favorable to the theory and practice of national irrigation, and who labored faithfully for the passage of the act which this bill proposes now to extend to the State of Texas, are delighted at the large number of recruits we find to our ranks. It is certainly creditable to the gentlemen who favored the irrigation act in the first instance, and who voted for it, that those who most vehemently opposed it are now the most earnest guardians of the funds.

But these new-found friends of national irrigation are somewhat belated in their solicitude for the reclamation fund, for the House a year ago by a unanimous vote (I think not a record vote) extended to the valley of the Rio Grande in Texas the national reclamation act. That action became necessary because it was discovered that in order to carry out comprehensive irrigation projects under the law, to cover lands in New Mexico, it would be necessary to place a dam at a point where, to make the scheme a paying one, some land in Texas must be irrigated to help repay the cost.

Since that time there has been much discussion among the friends of irrigation in the West as to the advisability of extending the law generally to the State of Texas. The irrigation congress last year recommended that that be done. The President of the United States recommended it in his message. The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, having charge of these matters, after very careful consideration, came to the conclusion that in order to make the law in fact what it is in name—a national law—the arid and semiarid lands in the United States not now under the provisions of the law should be included, and come under the provisions of the law, thereby rounding out the measure and making it in fact a national irrigation law.

This is the more important in the case of Texas, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that not only the Rio Grande, but the Pecos and the Canadian, flowing, when they flow at all, out of territory now under the national irrigation law, flow into the State of Texas. And in order to carry out any comprehensive project on either of those streams at any time in the future when it might seem wise to do so and the condition of the funds will allow it, it is necessary that the provisions of the law be extended to the State of Texas. Hence, the committee unanimously and without a thought that there would be any special opposition to the bill, reported it. And we find the curious condition existing, that most of the opposition to the measure, advocated, as it is, by the friends of irrigation, comes from gentlemen who, if they now favor the national irrigation policy, are very recent converts to it.

And in this connection I wish to suggest to these converts to the faith that they are doing a great injury to the cause of irrigation when they suggest on the floor of this House that we of the West do not expect a return of the moneys which the Government invests. We believe that the carrying out of that scheme in the largest possible way, to the fullest extent, and to the benefit of the greatest number of people—aye, the very continuance of the policy—depends upon the full return to the Government of the moneys expended in construction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question as to whether or not Texas has contributed to this fund is a relatively unimportant one. Why, the State of Nevada has only contributed $64,000 to the national irrigation fund, and yet we have already expended in that State $2,000,000, and the officers in charge of the work are proposing to further expend a million dollars in the near future. It is not possible that the States shall benefit in proportion to their contributions to the fund, but in proportion to the existence within their borders of feasible and practicable irrigation projects. It is true that the law provides that the major portion of the fund which the sale of lands in a given State brings to the fund shall be expended in that State, provided that in the State there are feasible and practicable irrigation projects, but that is only a direction to the departmental officers, and merely places upon them the responsibility of ascertaining whether there are feasible projects in the various States contributing to the fund, and if there are, they shall expend a major portion of the fund in the State from which it flows.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I wish to ask a question for information that may affect the judgment of some Members of the House. In case that this bill should pass and money from the reclamation fund were expended as proposed, would that money be refunded to the reclamation fund?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir; it must be refunded under the terms of the reclamation act, and the only difference between Texas and the balance of the arid-land States is that Texas does not in the first instance contribute to the fund; but, as I have just stated to the House, the State of Nevada has so far only contributed $64,000, while we have expended $2,000,000 within her borders. The State of Oregon has turned into the fund $4,750,000, and up to this time only $114,000 has been expended there, though large sums will eventually be expended in Oregon as soon as the details of projects can be worked out, and in all of the other States which are contributing to the fund where feasible projects exist. The mere fact that the sales of public lands in a given State are large does not in itself constitute a claim that money shall be expended in the State.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all there is to this bill is simply a proposition to round out and nationalize the national irrigation law, to make it complete, to cover the comparatively small portions of semiarid lands not now under its provisions.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman tell me about what portion of the land to be reclaimed, outside of the State of Texas, is public land and what is owned by private parties?

Mr. MONDELL. In some instances practically all the lands in a project are private lands and in others all or nearly so are public lands.

Mr. YOUNG. You could not tell the proportion as a whole?

Mr. MONDELL. No, I could not. There are some large projects involving the expenditure of millions of dollars where nine-tenths of the land is private land and where the conditions exist exactly as they do in Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—ayes 88, noes 51.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is not on the passage of the bill. All time taken on this vote is wasted.

Mr. LACEY. I withdraw the demand.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 89, answered "present" 17, not voting 153, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. ALLEN of New Jersey with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. BRICK with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. GRIGGS.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of California, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. 18334) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for bringing home the remains of officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who die abroad, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, and also that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "bringing home the remains of officers and men, Navy and Marine Corps, who die abroad," on account of the fiscal year 1906, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman further asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if these officers died in the Philippines?

Mr. LITTAUER. The annual naval act carries an appropriation of $10,000 for bringing home the remains of officers and men who die abroad. The extreme urgency of this case is because of the accident that happened on the U. S. S. Kearsarge a few days ago.

Mr. SULZER. Then this bill does not refer to officers that have died in the Philippines. I want to know the fact, and have the truth stated, that is all. I have no objection to the bill. I want its phraseology accurate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the deficiency in this appropriation rises because of the death of so many men in connection with the accident on the U. S. S. Bennington, where there were sixty-five men and a number of officers brought home. On account of that accident the appropriation has been entirely exhausted. There is no money with which to bring home the remains of the men who have recently been killed in the accident that occurred on the Kearsarge.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF GOVERNMENT TO APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith a letter of the Attorney-General, inclosing a statement of the proceedings by the United States against the individuals and corporations commonly known as the "beef packers," and commenting upon the decision of District Judge Humphrey. The result has been a miscarriage of justice. It clearly appears from the letter of the Attorney-General that no criticism whatever attaches to Commissioner Garfield. What he did was in strict accordance with the law and in pursuance of a duty imposed on him by Congress, which could not be avoided; and, of course, Congress in passing the Martin resolution could not possibly have foreseen the decision of Judge Humphrey.

But this interpretation by Judge Humphrey of the will of the Congress, as expressed in legislation, is such as to make that will absolutely abortive. Unfortunately there is grave doubt whether the Government has the right of appeal from this decision of the district judge. The case well illustrates the desirability of conferring upon the Government the same right of appeal in criminal cases, on questions of law, which the defendant now has, in all cases where the defendant had not been put in jeopardy by a trial upon the merits of the charge made against him. The laws of many of the States, and the law of the District of Columbia, recently enacted by the Congress, give the Government the right of appeal. A general law of the character indicated should certainly be enacted.

Furthermore, it is very desirable to enact a law declaring the true construction of the existing legislation, so far as it affects immunity. I can hardly believe that the ruling of Judge Humphrey will followed by other judges; but if it should be followed, the result would be either completely to nullify very much, and possibly the major part, of the good to be obtained from the interstate-commerce law and from the law creating the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor; or else frequently to obstruct an appeal to the criminal laws by the Department of Justice. There seems to be no good reason why the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, each, should not, for the common good, proceed within its own powers without undue interference with the functions of the other. It is, of course, necessary, under the Constitution and the laws, that persons who give testimony or produce evidence as witnesses should receive immunity from prosecution. It has hitherto been supposed that the immunity conferred by existing laws was only upon persons who, being subpœnaed, had given testimony or produced evidence as witnesses relating to any offense with which they were, or might be, charged. But Judge Humphrey's decision is, in effect, that, if either the Commissioner of Corporations does his duty, or the Interstate Commerce Commission does its, by making the investigations which they by law are required to make, though they issue no subpœna and receive no testimony or evidence, within the proper meaning of those words, the very fact of the investigation may of itself operate to prevent the prosecution of any offender for any offense which has been developed in even the most indirect manner during the course of the investigation, or even for any offense which may have been detected by investigations conducted by the Department of Justice entirely independently of the labors of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Commissioner of Corporations—the only condition of immunity being that the offender should have given, or directed to be given, information which related to the subject out of which the offense has grown.

In offenses of this kind it is at the best hard enough to execute justice upon offenders. Our system of criminal jurisprudence has descended to us from a period when the danger was lest the accused should not have his rights adequately preserved, and it is admirably framed to meet this danger. But at present the danger is just the reverse—that is, the danger nowadays is not that the innocent man will be convicted of crime, but that the guilty man will go scot-free. This is especially the case where the crime is one of greed and cunning perpetrated by a man of great wealth in the course of those business operations where the code of conduct is at variance not merely with the code of humanity and morality, but with the code as established in the law of the land. It is much easier, but much less effective, to proceed against a corporation than to proceed against the individuals in that corporation who are themselves responsible for the wrongdoing. Very naturally outside persons, who have no knowledge of the facts and no responsibility for the success of the proceedings, are apt to clamor for action against the individuals. The Department of Justice has, most wisely, invariably refused thus to proceed against individuals, unless it was convinced both that they were in fact guilty and that there was at least a reasonable chance of establishing this fact of their guilt. These beef-packing cases offered one of the very few instances where there was not only the moral certainty that the accused men were guilty, but what seemed, and now seems, sufficient legal evidence of the fact.

But in obedience to the explicit order of the Congress the Commissioner of Corporations had investigated the beef-packing business. The counsel for the beef packers explicitly admitted that there was no claim that any promise of immunity had been given by Mr. Garfield, as shown by the following colloquy during the argument of the Attorney-General:

"Mr. MOODY. * * * I dismiss almost with a word the claim that Mr. Garfield promised immunity. Whether there is any evidence of such a promise or not I do not know and I do not care.

"Mr. MILLER (the counsel for the beef packers). There is no claim of it.

"Mr. MOODY. Then I was mistaken, and I will not even say that word."

But Judge Humphrey holds that if the Commissioner of Corporations (and therefore if the Interstate Commerce Commission) in the course of any investigations prescribed by Congress asks any questions of a person not called as a witness, or asks any questions of an officer of a corporation not called as a witness, with regard to the action of the corporation on a subject out of which prosecutions may subsequently arise, then the fact of such questions having been asked operates as a bar to the prosecution of that person or of that officer of the corporation for his own misdeeds. Such interpretation of the law comes measurably near making the law a farce; and I therefore recommend that the Congress pass a declaratory act stating its real intention.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 18, 1906.

REQUEST FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4952) making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. And, Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, representing the minority, if we can not agree upon some limit for general debate? The gentleman appreciates how important it is that this bill gets into the Senate as early as possible.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts I really believe that we could expedite the passage of the bill by not entering into a hard and fast agreement at this time as to the limit that should be placed upon the time for general debate. I have requests for three hours and five minutes of general debate upon the bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman I have had requests upon this side of the Chamber, but finally I persuaded them to withdraw all requests for debate not upon the bill, and I think if the gentleman will endeavor we can agree upon some time, which will shorten the discussion.

Mr. BURLESON. Well, the gentlemen who have requested this time of me have stated they desired to use the time upon the floor——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Upon this bill?

Mr. BURLESON. One gentleman proposes to discuss the bill itself, and I have a request for another hour——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let me ask my friend——

Mr. BURLESON. Included in that time is half an hour for the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was a little bit surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts would, as it were, drive off the gentlemen on his side of the House from discussing subjects generally. We have very little chance for debate in the House anyway, and when the opportunity comes along we ought to throw open the doors a little bit. There are enough speeches suppressed at best.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We debated a whole week on the post-office bill, and the agricultural appropriation bill is to immediately follow this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And there are nearly 400 Members in this House, and there are thousands of subjects that ought to be discussed, and we have gotten along pretty well in discussing matters in this Congress, better than we have for the last eight or ten years, by allowing freer debate.

Mr. BURLESON. And I would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Mississippi has just submitted a request for an hour additional, which will make the request for four hours and five minutes which I already have.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned, I will say to the gentleman from Texas I will surrender whatever time he has accorded to me. I do not want to block anything. I am simply speaking generally for reasonable chance for anyone to speak who desires.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Suppose I suggest to the gentleman we agree upon five hours of general debate, and I will yield to the gentleman. I do not expect to use more than an hour on this side——

Mr. BURLESON. With that understanding, that I may have four hours of the five, I will agree with the gentleman that debate be closed at the end of five hours, and whatever time is not consumed by the gentlemen who have mentioned the matter to me requesting time I will yield back to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will accept the gentleman's proposition, making it six hours, so that I may have an hour's leeway in case I have to yield to somebody.

Mr. BURLESON. We must make some provision for a statement to be made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and I shall submit about a ten minutes' statement.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman state that he needs four hours?

Mr. BURLESON. I have requests for four hours and five minutes outside of the time that is to be consumed by the gentlemen on the committee.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Outside of that?

Mr. BURLESON. Outside of that.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then you would probably need four hours and a half?

Mr. BURLESON. Four hours and a half.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better go on without an agreement.

FRANKLIN MEMORIAL.

The SPEAKER. Pending the gentleman's motion, the Chair will say that Messrs. FASSETT and WATSON ask to be relieved from committee service in connection with the Franklin memorial, and the Chair designates, if there be no objection, Messrs. FOSTER of Vermont and BENNET of New York.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will propose to the gentleman from Texas [Mr BURLESON] that we make this provision, namely, call it seven hours, to be divided equally between two sides, to be controlled by the gentleman and myself. That will leave the gentleman three hours and a half. I will agree to yield to him at least an hour from our side.

Mr. BURLESON. That will give four hours and a half?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. That will leave twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from New York and myself. I will content myself with ten minutes if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] can content himself with fifteen minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It seems to me you are getting most of our time in that way.

Mr. BURLESON. I think we can enter into that agreement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the debate go on without any agreement until we know something about the time.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 16550.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, before going into the Committee of the Whole I would like to have consent to extend my remarks on the Texas bill in the RECORD.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a similar request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DISASTER.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me by many Members in my neighborhood here that on account of the terrible calamity in California it would be proper for the House to adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has prepared a resolution which he desires to offer.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman from California. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the messages that have been coming from San Francisco in the past hour or two are of the most appalling nature. The latest that I have heard is that fifty-four blocks of the city of San Francisco have been destroyed, while the cities on the other side of the bay are also in a terrible condition. No doubt there is a great loss of life and consequent calamity. I therefore desire to offer a resolution that the War Department and the Navy Department place at the disposal of the mayors of the city of San Francisco and other afflicted communities such supplies as may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that the joint resolution which he proposes should be in black and white, and drawn with care, in order to cover the ground. Perhaps it would take but a short time to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman, then, that the House might go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for a time, until such a joint resolution could be prepared.

Mr. KAHN. I can prepare the resolution in a very few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. And then the committee can rise.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Then, on motion of Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18198) making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18198—the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is my first service in connection with this District of Columbia appropriation bill, and it is perhaps but fair to say that of the subcommittee which prepared this bill, four of the five were equally inexperienced. Consequently we went into the preparation of the bill with more care, perhaps, at least in more detail, than is generally expended by a committee on such a bill and have felt more than usual deference for the experience of our predecessors.

I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that a bill of this kind, so local in its character, has nothing intrinsically interesting to the membership of the House. Indeed, when I was first assigned to membership of this subcommittee, I felt that it was the most undesirable and unpleasant of all subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee; but I have found it much less irksome than I expected, for it presents the great problem of municipal government, which is to-day one of the most pressing and most interesting problems before the country, and the one which apparently is least near a satisfactory solution.

One feature which has impressed me in the consideration of the bill is that all the pressure that came on the committee was for increased expenditure. Now, every member of every appropriation committee in the House has doubtless had the same feeling—that the pressure is always for increased expenditures and nobody is interested in economy. But I felt it even more strongly than ever in this District appropriation bill. It has seemed that nobody in the District of Columbia is interested in economical expenditures of money, and everybody is interested that more appropriations shall be made in one line or another. This, I suppose, comes partly from the fact that the United States pays half the expenses of the District and consequently each citizen of the District feels that what is spent is coming from Uncle Sam. But it comes also, I think, from another reason—from the way the taxes in the District are imposed. It comes from the fact that here, if the expenditures are large, it makes no increase in the individual taxes. In our home cities, if an administration makes a large or extravagant expenditure, it knows that it has an immediate effect on the pockets of the citizens; that the tax rate will be raised, and that criticism will follow, for nothing is more sensitive than a man's feeling about paying larger taxes. But in the District of Columbia, no matter how large the expenditure is, that has no effect upon the amount of taxes, because of the cast-iron rule that is adopted, imposing $15 on a thousand each year, no matter what the expenditure is. Moreover, that $15 a thousand is not imposed upon the par or market value of the property, but imposed upon a 66 per cent valuation.

Now, I think here at the outset that this present system of taxation in the District of Columbia is unfortunate. It seems unnatural that there should be no relation between the amount of expenditure and the amount of taxation. It seems to me unfortunate that an extravagant administration should not run the risk of bringing down upon itself criticisms from the taxpayers who have had money taken from them. And if we allow this system to exist, it seems to me it ought to be put upon a fairer basis than $15 a thousand upon a 66 per cent valuation, which is lower than that of any city in my Commonwealth that I know of.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Why is it limited to $15 a thousand, or why limit it to 66 per cent in assessing the value?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Because the law provides it.

Mr. SIMS. What I wanted to know was why it should be that way?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not think it should be so. I think the gentleman's committee should change it.

Mr. SIMS. I am very anxious to change it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether personalty was assessed and paid taxes upon the same basis as alluded to by him—66 per cent of its market value?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is 66 per cent on personalty. But, of course, the tax on personalty does not include all personalty, but only includes visible property.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Does it include stocks and bonds?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Stocks, bonds, and money?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is practically only household effects.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Does not the law require it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The law does not require it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That seems to me to be a very great exemption from taxation.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: He says no matter what the expenditure, the rate of taxation and the rate of assessed valuation is never changed?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The assessed valuation is changed once in three years.

Mr. SCOTT. But the rate of taxation is not changed?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. I should think that would result either in a very large deficit when the expenses are large or in a very large surplus when the expenses are small.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is exactly the result.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to inquire what arrangement is made when there is a deficit?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This arrangement has been made, Mr. Chairman: For the last five years there has been a provision in the appropriation bill of each year that the deficit shall be advanced from the Treasury of the United States, and that the District shall pay 2 per cent on such advance. So it is practically loaned from the United States Treasury.

Mr. SCOTT. What arrangement is made for eventually paying this loan?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We are to pay it off in five years from next July. No bonds have been issued, but the provision is that it shall be paid in annual installments in the next five years. That must be saved out of the money that is raised by taxation, of course.

Mr. SCOTT. That is within the jurisdiction of your committee?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; I am sorry to say it is not.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman if it would not be perfectly possible to have a provision of law by which, after the amount of the expenses of the District has been fixed, the assessors should then be directed to impose upon the taxable property of the District one-half of the expense and collect it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Of course.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the procedure in every city that I know anything about.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. There are an indefinite number of ways in which this result could be reached.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the way it is ordinarily done. The amount is fixed and then the assessors levy it on the taxable property. Why is it not done here?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. So far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, it is because that committee has no legislative power.

Mr. PERKINS. You get a good many legislative provisions enacted on your bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. But it is all done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say this by way of compliment to your committee, that the small amount of tax which is imposed on personal property was imposed as the result of a provision put on the District bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am glad to know that.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he will offer to this bill an amendment making stocks, bonds, promissory notes, money, and other intangible personal property taxable at the same rate that other personal property is taxable?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will listen to me a little further I will state my opinion. It seems to me that is not the most crying evil for which there is a necessity of a change in the law.

Mr. SIMS. Would it not be a very desirable change?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am not certain about that. I will develop what I think could be done.

Mr. SIMS. Would you object or make a point of order to such an amendment if offered to this bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know. I will consider that when it comes.

Mr. SIMS. It is useless to prepare an amendment if the gentleman would make a point of order against it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know whether I would or not. Of course, Mr. Chairman, there is an obvious objection to any tax on stocks and bonds. All persons who live where that is the custom, as it is in my State, recognize that that kind of a tax has two objections. One that is usually raised is that it is inquisitorial; but the great objection to that tax is the impossibility of levying it with any fairness.

The man who divulges just what he has got pays the full tax, and the nine-tenths or ninety-nine one-hundredths who do not divulge just what they have escape in varying proportions. Consequently, I think everybody admits that there is always that unequal and unfair effect incident to any tax upon intangible personal property. But what it seems to me the gentleman's committee might wisely do is to change this $15 on a thousand, or else change the 66 per cent valuation. I do not believe there is a city in the whole State of Massachusetts that does not have to pay above $15 a thousand; not on a 66 per cent valuation, but on a full valuation. I suspect the tax rate runs from $15 to $20 per thousand on the marget value. Now, in Washington it runs $15 on the thousand on a 66 per cent valuation, which amounts to $10 per thousand on a full valuation. It seems to me that is far too low, and it is producing the natural tendency to make Washington a paradise for persons who wish to evade taxes. Persons come here and escape any taxation upon their investments. They pay no personal tax, except upon their household effects, and then only pay $10 a thousand upon the real value of their estate. That is far less than is paid in most of the Commonwealths of this country. I do not think it is right that so little should be paid here.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if, whatever the rate in other cities—and it probably averages $20 on a thousand of assessable property for general city expenses—there is not also thrown upon the real estate the cost of local improvements, while here this is entirely defrayed out of the general fund, and thus the entire taxes paid here are very much less than in corresponding cities?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is also a proper criticism, I think. So one result of my study of this bill has been to convince me that the tax law of the District needs revision, and that there ought to be a higher rate of taxation on the property here.

The Government now is paying one-half of the expenses. I do not suppose that will always remain true. I do not think it ought always to remain true, because, although we all recognize that this being the national capital we wish that it should be made a model city and we are willing that the Government should contribute toward that end, yet I think we recognize, too, that Washington is growing so fast, and that the residential and business portions are so far exceeding in growth the national portion, that in a few years the same half-and-half division, which may have been fair years ago and may be fair to-day, will not be fair and undoubtedly will be changed.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask how long that has been the rule here?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Since 1878 at least.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What was the object of it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. And it may have been before 1878, but it has been certainly since 1878.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What was the object of that rule?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I was not here in 1878, but the theory on which it has been generally defended is that the Government owning so large an amount of property in the city which is exempt from taxation—and at that time I suppose it owned more proportionately than now—it was jumped at as a fair proposition that as more than one-half of the property was owned by the Government and was exempt from taxation the Government should pay one-half of the expenses.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I had assumed that it was due to the fact that the Government exercises almost absolute control over the property rights in this District, subject to constitutional limitations, and that in exercising those rights the Government's necessities grow with each year; the property holder is necessarily at the mercy of the Government, and therefore he got his compensation for the risk in this cession of taxes and sharing of the expenses. Now, I want to know if the same reason does not exist to-day as much as it ever did, and if it will not continue to exist as the Government's interest grows larger?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is an argument for that proposition, but the other argument is the one I have heard put forward as the main argument. I was not here in 1878, and can not, of course, tell what was in the minds of those who devised the scheme.

Mr. SIMS. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would like to state to the gentleman from Michigan——

M. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to state to the gentleman from Michigan, that after the municipal form of government was abolished and they established a board of public works, they entered into such a scheme of improvement that they run the city hopelessly in debt and were practically confiscating the property of the small owners, and this act of 1878 was in part passed to redeem them from a hopeless case of insolvency which that form of government brought them into.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if the rate of taxation was made as high here as it is in the average city throughout the country we would have money enough in the next few years to make this really a model city, to do away with the portions of it which are a disgrace to any city, and to have our streets well paved and well kept and well lighted, and to have our schools well housed and conducted, all our departments efficiently maintained, and, in fact, to have all the duties of government so performed as to make this the model city, which I am sure the country wants.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If it does not interrupt the gentleman, I want his judgment as to whether the streets are kept clean and in good repair now?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not consider that they are well kept, though they are better than in most cities.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I consider them in very bad condition, a disgrace to the District—I want to emphasize that as strongly as I know how.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. To-day the condition of the finances of the city is this: There is a debt of about $11,000,000, the residue of a bond issue of over twenty millions about thirty years ago. To-day that debt is about $11,000,000, and we pay into a sinking fund every year to cancel it at maturity $975,000.

Mr. SCOTT. In what form is that debt carried?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It was a bond issue.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Government pay one-half interest on those bonds?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes. They were issued at the time the city was really made over, about thirty or forty years ago, as the gentleman will recollect. Those bonds have been taken up and canceled, until now there are only about $11,000,000 of them outstanding.

Mr. SCOTT. When the Government is called upon in the way of current expenses to advance money at the rate of 2 per cent, as the gentleman suggested a moment ago, are bonds issued to cover that debt?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No. This is besides that, which I shall come to in a moment.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me ask the gentleman this further question: Does the Government pay one-half of the 2 per cent interest on this advanced money?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No. The District alone pays that. We pay half the interest and principle on those other bonds. Now, besides that $11,000,000, which we are paying at the rate of $975,000 a year into the sinking fund, and which will cancel them at maturity, in the last few years we have incurred an indebtedness of about $2,000,000, which is advanced from the Treasury of the United States, and on which we pay 2 per cent. That debt has been created in this way.

A few years ago we began the sewage-disposal plant, which is now nearly completed and which cost over $5,000,000. Then we are just completing the filtration plant, at an expense of three and a half millions of dollars, making eight and a half millions of dollars. Then we are building our new municipal building, at an expense of two millions and a half, not yet all paid for, which makes eleven millions; and, further, we have agreed to pay to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and for the change of grade at the new station over $3,000,000, making in all over $14,000,000, all of which public works we have begun in the last five years, and for which we have paid as much as we could each year. Any balance that is left over any year went to pay that debt, and any deficit increased that debt; and there remains due upon those $14,000,000 now $2,000,000, and the completion of these various projects will cost between two and three millions more, making in all from four to five millions of dollars which the District will owe the United States and on which it pays an interest of 2 per cent. So that, in addition to our bonded indebtedness, there is this debt of $4,000,000. I think no one will say that that debt was unwisely incurred, and I think it is very creditable that so much of it has been paid out of current income, and the only question is whether it would have been wiser to have issued bonds, as other cities would.

That indebtedness, by the terms of the resolution, is payable to the United States in the next five years, so it will take probably from seven to eight hundred thousand dollars a year to pay that off. So it seems to me if we are going to appropriate as we ought to for the current needs of the city and have the streets and the schools and all the other items of city expenses up to the proper standard, there is urgent need of increasing the revenues of the District.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, just on that point I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be fairer, instead of increasing the rate of taxation upon real estate and tangible personal property, to provide that intangible personal property shall be taxed? I understand the gentleman to say that the objection to the taxation of intangible property, money, bonds, stocks, etc., is that dishonest people will cover up their intangible property and make dishonest returns; but is it not a fact that in every State in the Union that character of property is taxed and is the source of considerable revenue?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I don't know whether it is true in every State in the Union. It is in my State. But I do not think I care to go into that question as to what should be taxed. That is, of course, not the province of this committee.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman is discussing this very question, however, and I simply want to make one or two observations, which I regard as timely and in point. I have been told that a great many very wealthy people, people whose wealth is composed almost entirely of money, bonds, and stocks, come here to reside for the sole purpose of escaping taxation.

I am told that a citizen of one of the cities of Virginia, worth probably several million of dollars, nearly every dollar of which was in intangible personal property, came here to live for the sole purpose of escaping taxation in my State, and it is very unjust to the States of the Union that the laws of the District of Columbia should encourage this character of dishonesty. It makes the city of Washington a sort of asylum for the tax dodgers of the country—a city of refuge for millionaires who desire to escape just taxation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into a general discussion of taxation. I alluded to the question because, this being my first year on this subcommittee, I thought I would suggest to the House how the existing conditions in the city impressed an unprejudiced mind, and it does seem to me that the taxation rate is much too low and that it ought to be changed; but of course that is not within the province of this committee, and I trust it will be taken care of by the proper committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What committee has charge of that?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The District Committee, of course. Now, taking up the bill itself, I do not suppose the House wants me to go into the details, but I want to point out a few salient features of it.

This bill appropriates $573,000 less than the bill of last year, but I do not wish to impose upon the House a false claim for economy. This illustrates the dangers and uncertainty of comparisons, for really we do not deserve any encomiums for that saving. That saving comes not from current expenses, but comes because some of these large projects in which the city has been engaged for the last five years are reaching completion and more had to be expended for them last year than this year. For instance, for grade crossings about the Union Station last year we spent $450,000 and this year only $50,000. Last year we built the Potomac bridge for $200,000. This year it is completed and we have no expense for it. Last year we spent $394,000 on the Connecticut Avenue Bridge; this year we only spend $150,000. On the other hand, this year we appropriate $279,000 for the Anacostia bridge and $38,000 for the K Street Bridge, for which last year nothing was spent. Last year we spent on the sewage-disposal system about a million and a half, on which we do not have to spend any this year. This year, however, on the filtration plant we have to spend $80,000 and we shall spend $500,000 on the municipal building, against $300,000 last year. This year we appropriate for a tuberculosis hospital $100,000, so comparing what I think might be called extraordinary expenses—permanent expenses of last year—with this I think that last year we spent about a million dollars more——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do you mean by "we?"

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Congress last year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. "We" means Congress?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. As I was saying, we spent about a million dollars more last year for these extraordinary projects. Taking from that the $573,000 which we seem to have saved leaves about $425,000, which is the amount we appropriate this year more than last year for current expenses, but that is explained largely by a few big items. For instance, there is an appropriation of a hundred and seventy-seven thousand dollars more for new schoolhouses than there was last year, and for street cleaning we recommend $34,000 more, and for collection of garbage $68,000 more; repairs to streets, $75,000 more. So that explains in a general way the difference of expenditures between the bill of last year and the bill which we report this year. The growth of the city would naturally demand an increasing expenditure each year.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not particular about the gentleman answering it now, but will the gentleman before he finishes his remarks explain the action of the committee in regard to the different hospitals? I notice in the report that you have cut out the appropriation for hospitals with the exception of the new one for which you provide. I am not at all criticising the committee, but I would like to understand why the appropriations heretofore were made for these hospitals, and if it was good to make them, why the committee ceased to make these appropriations this year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, I will explain that now as well as any other time. The practice in the city in the past has been this: There are in the city a number, from eight to a dozen, good-sized hospitals which were started as benevolent, charitable institutions and which grew up without any support by Congress. Gradually persons who were interested in those hospitals found that they were in need, found, I suppose, as we always do, that it was difficult to raise money—especially difficult in a city like Washington, where so large a proportion of the residents are transient, they must necessarily have less civic pride and interest than in our ordinary cities—they found that it was difficult to raise money, and so they came to Congress for help and Congress yielded to their appeal began some years ago to appropriate lump sums for hospitals by name. The result of that would be that there was handed down right over to each hospital the amount which Congress appropriated to it and which they could spend as they pleased, and we never knew what return we got for it or how needy the patients were. I do not wish to reflect on the hospitals and I do not doubt they were run with the purest of purpose and that the money was well expended.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, were these appropriations provided by any law except the appropriation bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, as a matter of fact, the point of order would have been good against any of these items any time?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, it's not necessary for me to admit that.

Mr. NORRIS. They would, if they were not in accordance——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. In accordance with existing law. We will not raise that question. It was done year by year, and we gave so much money to these hospitals. A few years ago it was suggested to Congress that it was not a wise way to do; that it would be better to appropriate, say, for a certain hospital $10,000, and say that money shall be given to the hospital not outright, but shall be given to the order of the board of charities of the District, and then let that board make a contract with the hospital that they shall take care of so many patients, or that they shall receive so much a patient, until that money was exhausted, so that we would be sure that the city was getting back from the hospitals its money's worth, and that we might know how many and just what poor people were being treated. And that has been the rule for some years.

Now, the board of charities came before us and said that "different hospitals charge different prices, some hospitals charging one price and some another, and some are doing much more charity work than others. There is nothing to compel a hospital to fix any specific price. They get a certain amount that is appropriated to them, and they can make what contract they please with us. Some may charge just what it costs them, some may charge more, some less; but if you will give us, instead of appropriating for each hospital, a lump sum and allow us to appropriate it to which hospital we please, then we can distribute it, and we can say to each hospital: 'How much will you take care of the patients for? How much does it cost you to take care of them?' and then the hospitals will, as it were, be bidding against each other." And in that way they could distribute the money more fairly and get a better return for the city than if Congress simply voted this fixed sum to each hospital.

It impressed us that if the board of charities was intelligent and honest and fair they could do better in that way than if we appropriated so much to each hospital, and the committee said: "We will give them a year's trial; we will give the board of charities outright a sum of money, less than we gave before, because they said they could save money by it and could get just as good returns. We will give them this lump sum and will see if they can accomplish what they promise, namely, that they can get better returns for the money than they are now getting."

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I agree with the gentleman's suggestion. I understand that there is no appropriation in this bill specifically for the Home for Incurables. I want to know whether this board of charities out of that lump sum will have the right to apply any of it for the purpose of maintaining the Home for Incurables, which heretofore has had about $3,000 a year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am not sure offhand whether that was one of the hospitals or not. My recollection is that it is not.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to know why, then, there was no special appropriation for the Home for Incurables.

Mr. BURLESON. It was embraced in the number of hospitals.

Mr. KEIFER. If that is so——

Mr. BURLESON. It is. It was embraced in the number of hospitals that were not carried in the bill at this time.

Mr. KEIFER. The board of charities would make a specific appropriation in that distribution for the conduct of the Home for Incurables?

Mr. BURLESON. If they could reach a proper understanding with those who conduct it.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand. I think there has been allowed about $3,000, which is only a small part of what they expend.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I had forgotten whether it was in the list or not.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose the gentleman means to convey the idea that it is necessary to get these different hospitals bidding against each other in order to get an economical expenditure of the money?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not mean to reflect, of course, on the hospitals at all.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman made the statement that the board of charities would get the hospitals to bid against each other.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We thought it would equalize the sums that were paid per man to each hospital.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I think that would be a pretty good idea; but I want to offer the suggestion that it seemed to me that there was not any money ever spent anywhere that we could spend with a clearer conscience than any appropriations that we would make to most any of these hospitals, all of which, I understand, never turn away a sick person, regardless of his financial ability, but always give him care and attention and retain him until his case is disposed of, unless it should be some disease that they can not keep in that particular kind of a hospital. So it seems to me we ought to be as liberal as we can, without any reckless expenditure of money, in dealing with these hospitals, none of which, as I understand, are organized for the purpose of making money. None of them are making money, and all of them are in debt, and all doing charitable work, in which we all, and the country, ought to take a great deal of just pride. So that we ought to treat them liberally.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I heartily agree with the gentleman. I think I was unhappy in my expression. What I meant was to equalize the cost in the different hospitals, and the work would probably be better done than it is now, and would allow the board of charities the same control as to what amount is expended on each patient. But by our appropriation we expect the same amount of work will be done as done now.

I wish to say, moreover, in addition to what I have said about these hospitals, that though they have gradually come to depend on the Government for the money, I do not mean by that to reflect upon the management of the hospitals. They are noble charities, and Washington has disinterested and generous men and women who work for them. I happen to know that last year the appropriation of one of them was cut down $5,000, and the good people interested in it went out and raised the money themselves and put it in the funds of the hospital. So that there is a charitable spirit in Washington, and these hospitals are an expression of it, and we do not wish to deny it or to reflect on them, but we thought this new plan a wiser business policy, and that we had better at least try it one year and see if it would produce the results promised from it.

I ought to mention one other phase——

Mr. SIMS. Before the gentleman does that, I notice an appropriation in the bill for the removal of garbage and ashes. Is the appropriation sufficient to do all that work?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We have raised that appropriation $65,000 over what it was last year. So we hope it will be sufficient.

Mr. SIMS. I just want to state to the gentleman in my own experience I have had to pay personally private persons for the removal of these very items.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is one of the places in the bill we have largely increased the appropriation.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman know whether there has been any effort to get any pay for this garbage or not?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We were told that there had been an effort, but it has not succeeded so far.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that if the city owned an incinerating plant and a fertilizing plant that they could get all this garbage removed free and make a profit in addition?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know enough about that to express an opinion.

Mr. SIMS. If given a sufficient length of time in the way of contract, I am confident they could get it done.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Now, there are a few other matters in the bill I should refer to. The clause about the Anacostia bridge is plainly subject to a point of order. It is suggested by us as practically a request for unanimous consent, because it seemed to us imperatively necessary now, and we hoped everyone would accede to it. The new Anacostia bridge was authorized a couple of years ago by the District Committee—— the committee. I thought the District Committee authorized it. On the other side of the bridge, a short way over, the highway crosses the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. It was expected at that time they were going to abandon that track, which is a small branch track, but the new industry being launched near there, I understand, has changed the purpose of the railroad, and this branch is going to continue. Therefore it was suggested to the committee that it was indispensable that a change of grade should be made, so that it should no longer be a grade crossing.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. By the Appropriations Committee. I made the point of order against it.

Of course, that ought to be done before the bridge was completed. Therefore we have put into this bill a clause changing the grade of the highway and Baltimore and Ohio tracks just beyond the bridge, and provided also, which we thought was fair, that the Baltimore and Ohio should pay the expense of changing the grade. That, of course, is subject to the point of order.

We found, too, that this highway bridge had been built more wide and more expensively, in order that a street car line might use it, and we thought it but fair that the car company should pay some portion of the incurred cost, and we have provided that it should pay $32,500, or one-tenth of the cost.

That, of course, is also subject to a point of order, and is simply suggested for the unanimous consent of the committee. We have also a provision that street railway companies shall sprinkle their tracks in the streets wherever the Commissioners order, because you all know that in summer the dust that rises from the passage of a street car goes far to make the street unendurable; and it is no more than fair, particularly as they said it would not be any very great additional expense to put on a few tank cars, that they should provide them.

We have also provided that the price of lighting the streets shall be reduced from $20 to $15 for plain gas lamps, from $25 to $20 for mantle burners, and from $85 to $80 for electric lamps.

One other provision that I wish to allude to, and then will yield the floor, is the appropriation of $100,000 for the inauguration of water meters in private residences. It appeared before us that our present water supply has nearly reached the limit of consumption and that in some days last year the demand was greater than the supply, so that we must either increase the supply or reduce the demand, and it seemed to us after investigation that much the cheaper and better way was to reduce the use of the water.

Mr. SIMS. How many years will you be in putting in the meter system?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We appropriate $100,000 this year.

Mr. SIMS. What time is given in the bill for a complete system of meters to go in?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The only provision is for $100,000 worth to go in this year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It was before I was on

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that by the time these meters are installed the increased growth of the city will demand an increased water supply and that we will still be unable to provide it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not think that, Mr. Chairman, because the facts show that in Washington the enormous amount of 220 gallons per capita is used, which is a very unusually large amount. Sixty gallons is considered a fair amount. We ought to save over half the present use. And although the growth of the city will gradually use up even our present supply, and of course some time we will be compelled to have a larger supply, yet the longer we can postpone it the more economical for the city.

Mr. SIMS. But the expense of putting in these meters will all be lost when you do have a new water supply.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, no; not at all. When we get our new water supply we will still use the meters. It seems to me the meter system is the proper, scientific system to check waste, and we will want it just as much when we get our new system as we want it now, to check the extravagant use of water.

Mr. SIMS. Will not the meter system tend to the reduction of the use of water for sanitary purposes among the poorer classes?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not think so. It will be so cheap that a man will not limit the necessary use of it. Where we suppose the waste comes very largely is that in Washington, the houses not being built for cold weather, a large portion of the population let the spigots run all through the cold weather and then in summer they let them run to keep the water cool.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Would not the gentleman think it advisable that his committee should recommend that the expense of putting in the meters should be borne by the property owners rather than by the Government? And is not that the usual way in cities throughout the United States?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not think it is usual. We concluded that this was the best way for us to do—to put them in—and then, of course, the water service will ultimately pay for them. It will come back from the users of the water ultimately, and it is only a question of each user paying it at the outset, or all the users contributing to all the meters.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. My experience is that the property owners usually put in the meters themselves. Of course that would of necessity reduce the water tax. It requires quite a large advance on the part of poor people to put in a meter.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is a strong argument for our plan. By the method we propose the District will put them in and then get back the price.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. What is the cost of a meter?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. From ten to twenty dollars apiece, I think. Of course, it amounts to the same thing in the long run. The consumers pay for it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Without criticising the committee, it seems to me that it is always expected here that the Government is to advance the money all the time.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The Government advances the money, but it comes back. It is all paid for out of the water, so that ultimately the users pay for the meter, but nobody has to put up the money at first. That was the argument that convinced us. I think the Government fares better in this case than in most of our appropriations.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Has the gentleman named all the provisions in the bill subject to a point of order?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; there are a few more, but I think they are all in the report, printed in italics.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not the effect of the meter proposition about this, that if you required the meters to be put in by the property owners instead of the Government putting them in, and, as you say, the user eventually paying for them, you would make the owner of the property pay for the meters, whereas in the end you make the renter pay for it in this way?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes; that would be true where the owner does not occupy the building. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to yield to him for a moment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it may be proper, in view of the message of the President calling the attention of the House to an apparent defect in the criminal procedure of the courts of the United States, as developed in the case of the packers at Chicago, to suggest two propositions. First, that on yesterday, in the United States court being held at Kansas City, Judge Macpherson decided the exact question raised in the Packers' case at Chicago exactly the reverse of that decided by Judge Humphrey; and to call attention to the fact that the defendants in the latter case have now an issue upon which, if they see fit, they can go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States to test the question whether Judge Macpherson's opinion is the true one, or whether Judge Humphrey is right in his definition of the law and in his ruling upon the question made in the Chicago case.

No doubt the proper practice in the United States ought to be so that in all criminal procedure the prosecuting side, "the State," as we usually call it, may have a direct avenue to the highest court of the State by exception to the ruling of the judge against the State or the prosecution. Such is the law in Ohio, and it is constantly practiced. The judge of the court, for instance, sustains a demurrer to the indictment, or makes a ruling upon a question of evidence, or any other important question, and the prosecuting attorney simply excepts to the opinion, and the statute permits him to go to the highest court for affirmation or reversal of the decision below. Of course the defendant can not again be put on trial. But the practice furnishes a ready way to ascertain the real legal and proper decision and settles the law for the future.

So the proposition is a correct one, and it is a defect in our legislation that it does not appear on the statute book of the United States, but it is proper that the House of Representatives shall make known to the country that on yesterday, in compliance with the report of the Judiciary Committee of this House, a bill in all respects conforming to the suggestions of the Attorney-General and of the President, was duly passed under a suspension of the rules in this House, and is now before the Senate of the United States. It is to be hoped that it may soon become the law of the country, and furnish a speedy means of reaching true results in all our criminal trials and upon all our criminal pleadings.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8198—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DISASTER.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have just received the following dispatch through the War Department:

Fifty-four blocks have been destroyed by fire. Four hundred bodies have been brought into the morgue. The town of Berkeley been demolished. Martial law has been declared. Palace Hotel on fire. Postal Telegraph Building, Examiner Building, Call Building have been destroyed. Dynamite is being used to check flames. At 1.30 p. m. a succession of slight shocks reported.

The condition in San Francisco is appalling, and in view of that fact I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to loan to the mayors of the cities of San Francisco, Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda, and such other cities on the Pacific coast as may have sustained damage, under such regulations and restrictions as he may deem proper, a sufficient number of tents to temporarily shelter such persons as may have been rendered homeless and have lost property by the earthquake of this date and attending conflagration, and to issue rations and supplies and render such other aid to such as are destitute and unable to provide for themselves.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Navy are also hereby directed to cooperate with the Secretary of War in extending relief and assistance to the stricken people herein referred to, to the extent of the use of the naval vessels, revenue cutters, and supplies under their control on the Pacific coast.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11976. An act for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico;

H. R. 229. An act providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins, and the distribution and redemption of said coins;

H. R. 17987. An act making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River; and

H. R. 13103. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHERLEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence until May 9.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY WITH CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the sympathy of the House is hereby extended to the people of the State of California in this the hour of their great disaster and suffering, caused by the extraordinary evolution of nature in that State, and that as an expression of our profound sympathy we do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Then, in accordance with the foregoing resolution (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1906.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following prayer:

My soul thirsteth for God—for the living God. When shall I come and appear before God? O my God, my soul is cast down within me. Therefore will I remember Thee! Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance and my God.

Let us pray.

Father, we have thanked Thee for the blessings of the past; we have asked Thy help in every way in the duties of the day. Now we come to Thee in sorrow and in calamity to ask Thee to give us the same strength, the same blessedness, and to show that in all partial evil Thy universal good shall prevail. Tell us what this is, that Thou art the living God with us always. We are weak, but Thou art strong; we know nothing, but Thou knowest everything; we are in darkness, but Thou art in the light.

O Father, come to us as a father to his children. Be with those who are in the greatest sorrow and trial. Strengthen us all by Thy infinite strength, that we may know Thee and enter into Thy service and go about Thy business; that in joy or in sorrow, in gladness or in weakness, we may know that we are the living children of a living God. So, not in vain for us that Thou hast spoken to us, and though we do not see Thee with the eye, that Thou art willing to write Thy laws upon our hearts. Father, we ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, Thine is the power, Thine is the glory, forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, out of the regular order of business I desire to introduce a joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making an appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the most terrible disaster which has ever taken place on this continent has occurred in the State of California, in which one-half of the city of San Francisco has been practically destroyed by earthquake and fire, and many towns and cities along the coast have suffered from similar devastation; and

Whereas in all of the afflicted localities there has been wrought such ruin as has resulted in great loss of life and the serious injury of thousands of people; and

Whereas the destruction of dwelling houses has rendered homeless 100,000 of the inhabitants of San Francisco alone; and

Whereas there is most urgent need of means to bury the dead, care for the injured, and shelter and feed the homeless; and

Whereas the local administrations will for some time be unable to cope with the situation and extend such aid and assistance as is immediately necessary: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $500,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of quartermaster's and commissary stores to such injured and destitute persons as may require assistance in the district devastated by earthquake and fire. And the Secretary of War is authorized to use the steamers and other boats and vessels belonging to or now employed by the Government upon San Francisco Bay or adjacent waters in the transportation and distribution of supplies furnished by the United States or individuals to and among such destitute and suffering people, and he may employ such other means of transportation as he may deem necessary to carry the purpose of this joint resolution into effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just read?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the joint resolution be immediately transmitted to the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be immediately transmitted, as requested by the Senator from California.

Mr. HALE. Has there come from the House a small deficiency bill providing for the sending home of the bodies of the officers and seamen who were killed on board the Kearsarge?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that no such bill has come to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Whenever it does come I desire to have it put on its passage without a reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Maine will be noted.

FISHING IN ALASKAN WATERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 267) to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any person not a citizen of the United States, or who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and is a bona fide resident therein, or for any company, corporation, or association not organized or authorized to transact business under the laws of the United States or under the laws of any State, Territory, or district thereof, or for any person not a native of Alaska, to catch or kill, or attempt to catch or kill, except with rod, spear, or gaff, any fish of any kind or species whatsoever in any of the waters of Alaska under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent those lawfully taking fish in the said waters from selling the same, fresh or cured, in Alaska or in Alaskan waters, to any alien person, company, or vessel then being lawfully in said waters: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent any person, firm, corporation, or association lawfully entitled to fish in the waters of Alaska from employing as laborers any aliens who can now be lawfully employed under the existing laws of the United States, either at stated wages or by piecework, or both, in connection with Alaskan fisheries, canneries, salteries, etc.

SEC. 2. That every person, company, corporation, or association found guilty of a violation of any provision of this act or of any regulation made thereunder shall, for each offense, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, which fine shall be a lien against any vessel or other property of the offending party or which was used in the commission of such unlawful act. Every vessel used or employed in violation of any provision of this act or of any regulation made thereunder shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any court having jurisdiction of the offense.

SEC. 3. That the violation of any provision of this act or of any regulation made thereunder may be prosecuted in any United States district court of Alaska, California, Oregon, or Washington.

SEC. 4. That the collector of customs of the district of Alaska is hereby authorized to search and seize every foreign vessel and arrest every person violating any provision of this act or any regulation made thereunder, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to authorize officers of the Navy and of the Revenue-Cutter Service and agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor to likewise make such searches, seizures and arrests. If any foreign vessel shall be found within the waters to which this act applies, having on board fresh or cured fish and apparatus or implement suitable for killing or taking fish, it shall be presumed that the vessel and apparatus were used in violation of this act until it is otherwise sufficiently proved. And every vessel, its tackle, apparatus, or implements so seized shall be given into the custody of the United States marshal of either of the districts mentioned in section 3 of this act, and shall be held by him subject to the proceedings provided for in section 2 of this act. The facts in connection with such seizure shall be at once reported to the United States district attorney for the district to which the vessel so seized shall be taken, whose duty it shall be to institute the proper proceedings.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with law to carry into effect the provisions of this act. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to enforce the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations made thereunder, and for that purpose he may employ, through the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Navy, the vessels of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service and of the Navy: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as affecting any existing treaty or convention between the United States and any foreign power.

Mr. FULTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would let it lie over for the day, so that I can examine it.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. FULTON subsequently said: A few minutes ago there was laid before the Senate certain amendments of the House to Senate bill 267, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asked that it might go over. He has looked into the bill and finds no objection to the same. I ask now that my motion to concur in the amendments of the House be considered.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what are the amendments of the House?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the amendment had better be printed. I do not like this manner of legislating, where some one consents to agreeing to an amendment without having it read or without any knowledge of it. I ask that it may be printed.

Mr. FULTON. The amendment has been read. But I have no objection to letting it go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be printed, so that we will know something about how to legislate on the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS. The reason why I asked the question was that the bill was originally reported from my committee.

Mr. FULTON. The amendment made by the House was designed to permit the employment of Chinese laborers in canneries. The bill is designed to exclude Japanese, although they are not named, but they have been going into Alaskan waters with their vessels and engaging in fishing there. It is designed to prevent that abuse.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator has no objection to the amendment going over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed, as requested by the Senator from Rhode Island.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Michael C. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 14591. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River in or near the city of Clarksville, State of Tennessee;

H. R. 14592. An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn.; and

H. R. 17135. An act providing that the State of Montana be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11565. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Brinker;

H. R. 14184. An act to extend the irrigation act to the State of Texas;

H. R. 16133. An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States;

H. R. 17757. An act extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. R. 18334. An act making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for bringing home remains of officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who die abroad.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 4952) making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 229. An act providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins, and the distribution and redemption of said coins;

H. R. 11976. An act for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico;

H. R. 17987. An act making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River.

BRINGING HOME OF REMAINS OF OFFICERS AND MEN OF NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill making an appropriation to supply a deficiency be laid before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 18334) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for bringing home remains of officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who die abroad was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

That to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "bringing home the remains of officers and men, Navy and Marine Corps, who die abroad," on account of the fiscal year 1906, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there is any need of a reference in this case. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Council of Jewish Women of New York City, N. Y., and a petition of the State Consumers' League of New York, praying for an investigation into the industrial conditions of women and children in the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MARTIN presented a petition of Local Union 1128, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Roanoke, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 4135) for the relief of the legal representatives of S. A. Buckner; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10152) granting certain lands to the city of Biloxi, in Harrison County, Miss., for park and cemetery purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 544) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Great Falls, Mont., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4956) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Versailles, in the State of Kentucky, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on the Library; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 5739) providing for the acceptance by the United States Government of the Old Flag House, tendered by the American Flag House and Betsy Ross Association; and

A bill (S. 5694) providing for the appointment of a national advisory board on civic art.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15513) to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16954) providing for the reappraisement of certain suburban lots in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1274) authorizing a public building at Washington, N. C., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2139) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14508) permitting the building of dams across the north and south branches of Rock River, adjacent to Vandruffs Island and Carrs Island, and across the cut-off between said islands, in Rock Island County, Ill., in aid of navigation and for the development of water power, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BULKELEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3862) to correct the military record of Lora E. Reed, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4089) to place David Robertson, sergeant, first class, Hospital Corps, on the retired list of the United States Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5639) to provide for the erection of a public building at San Juan, P. R., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REMOVAL OF DERELICTS.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5683) to provide for the removal of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation, and I submit a report thereon. The committee instructed me to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

I wish to say just one word in relation to it. It has the approval of the Navy Department, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce and Labor. A bill similar to it was reported from the Committee on Commerce in the last Congress and passed the Senate. It was reported favorably in the House, but no action was taken there. Also, a bill of the same kind was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs and passed the Senate, but received no action in the House.

This bill was presented only ten days ago, and I presume that I have received a hundred resolutions and requests from boards of trade, chambers of commerce, boards of underwriters, and ship associations, from Maine to New Orleans, urging the immediate passage of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have constructed a steam vessel specially fitted for and adapted to service at sea in bad weather, for the purpose of blowing up or otherwise destroying or towing into port wrecks, derelicts, and other floating dangers to navigation, the vessel to be operated and maintained by the Revenue-Cutter Service under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Section 2 appropriates $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the report and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5863) to provide for the removal of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass without amendment.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the appended letter of the Secretary, inclosing a draft of the bill and giving the reasons for its enactment.

The necessity for such legislation was pointed out by the Washington International Marine Conference of 1889. Efforts to secure an international agreement for the marking and destruction of these menaces to navigation have failed, and, naturally, because derelicts are chiefly American wooden schooners, lumber laden. Efforts to secure the removal or destruction of derelicts have been prosecuted in a desultory fashion, largely because jurisdiction has not been lodged in either of the three Departments of the Government which might well claim it, namely, the Treasury, Commerce and Labor, and Navy Departments.

In the Fifty-eighth Congress a bill was reported from this committee, appropriating $175,000 for the construction of a steam vessel to be used for this purpose, under the direction of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and authorizing the detail by the President, from time to time, of any public vessel for the removal or destruction of derelicts. That bill passed the Senate and was favorably reported to the House by its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but failed to receive consideration in that body.

In the same Congress a bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, providing for the construction of a derelict destroyer at a cost not exceeding $300,000, to be operated under the direction of the Navy Department. This bill likewise passed the Senate and was referred in the House to the same Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it lay without action.

The above-mentioned bills had the approval of the Departments of Commerce and Labor and the Navy, respectively; and the present measure, being recommended by the Treasury Department, it will be seen that three of the Executive Departments have approved of the construction of such a vessel as the bill contemplates, but, naturally perhaps, each has heretofore sought for itself the supervision of the work. It is not understood by this committee that the Department of Commerce and Labor now urges such a claim; and the Revenue-Cutter Service seems to be peculiarly adapted to this responsibility, having had large experience in the succoring of vessels in all kinds of weather.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 12, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

SIR: I transmit herewith a bill to provide for the removal of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation, with the request that you will introduce the same in the Senate of the United States, as I believe the measure is in accordance with the commercial interests of the country.

This bill provides for the construction of a steam vessel for the purpose of destroying or towing into port derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation, such vessel to be operated by the Revenue-Cutter Service, and to be specially fitted for this duty under all conditions of wind and sea.

It is a fact well recognized by those who are familiar with the navigation of vessels at sea that there is no greater danger to commerce than the presence of derelicts in the paths of navigation. These derelicts are chiefly wooden sailing vessels, laden with lumber, which have been abandoned at sea. They are practically unsinkable, and are a constant menace to all vessels passing in their vicinity. On the Atlantic coast of the United States they are carried, through the influence of the Gulf Stream, to the northward along the coast, directly in the track of the large coasting fleet, and finally are borne to the eastward in the paths of the trans-Atlantic liners, so that by the influence of this current the derelicts are constantly in waters where they constitute an ever-present danger to shipping. A derelict is a constant menace and obstruction to commerce until it is destroyed or is finally broken to pieces by the wind and sea.

The Pilot Chart for April, 1906, shows the existence on the Atlantic coast of the United States of ten derelicts and seven buoys adrift, all of danger to vessels that may encounter them while running at high speed at night or in thick weather.

The removal of these dangers is a duty that devolves naturally upon the Government, and can only be efficiently performed by a vessel specially fitted for and adapted to such service.

The proposed vessel will be always available to proceed promptly to the destruction of any floating wreck that may be reported. The nature of her construction, which will enable her to keep the sea at all times, and the provision that will be made for efficient towing will make her also an important factor in rendering aid to shipping in distress—a work in which the Revenue-Cutter Service is already engaged and with which it is entirely familiar.

The interests of commerce emphatically call for the removal of these floating obstructions in the paths of navigation, and I believe the passage of this bill in providing a vessel for this special purpose, under the control of the Revenue-Cutter Service, which is charged particularly with rendering aid to commerce, will be an important safeguard looking to the preservation of human life and property at sea.

The sum proposed to be appropriated, $250,000, should be sufficient for the construction and equipment of a vessel well adapted to this work.

Respectfully, L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5357) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River above the village of Monticello, Wright County, Minn., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPPING IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on the Philippines I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 18025) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes, and I am instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It merely postpones the operation of the coastwise law.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the bill permits enrolled vessels of the United States to engage in trade between our ports and Philippine ports. In other words, does it put the Philippine Islands within our domestic trade?

Mr. LODGE. No. The purpose of the act is to postpone the application of the coastwise law until April 11, 1909.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. That is all there is in the act which is new. The rest is a mere reenactment of existing law.

Mr. MALLORY. From the language of the act I am inclined to think that after 1909 domestic coastwise vessels will be enabled to go into that trade.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, after April 11, 1909, on which date the Spanish treaty limitation expires, the trade will be confined to coastwise vessels of American registry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not desire to obstruct the bill, but I should like to have an opportunity to look into it. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to permit it to go over until tomorrow. I object to its consideration at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5766) providing a method whereby persons may be admitted to become citizens of the Philippine Islands, and extending the naturalization laws of the United States to citizens of the Philippine Islands on the same conditions as are applicable to aliens; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying memoranda and letters from the War Department, which were ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5767) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Welch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 5768) for the relief of Mary E. Collier; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 5769) to declare the true intent and meaning of parts of the act entitled "An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission," and so forth, approved February 11, 1893, and an act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1903; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 5770) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to add to the segregation of coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5771) granting a pension to Mary E. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduce a bill (S. 5772) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Harris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $350 for the preparation of a table of contents and index to the final report of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following amendments intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

An amendment relative to the sale for town-site purposes by any Indian allottee of any portion of the lands allotted to him;

An amendment authorizing the issuance of a fee-simple patent to Demas Eastman, a Santee Sioux allottee; and

An amendment authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee simple to the widow and heirs of Charley Adass for land in the Olympia land district, State of Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment providing that section 15 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," shall not take effect until the date of the dissolution of the tribal governments of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment providing that the pay and allowances for civil engineers and assistant civil engineers shall be the same as are and may be provided by or in pursuance of law for naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, and also that the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks shall be selected from the members of the Corps of Civil Engineers of the Navy having not less than seven years of active service, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ALFRED M'PHERRAN.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Alfred McPherran, accompanying Senate bill S. 527, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, copies of the same to be left in the files, as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXX.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—FRANCES E. TAYLOR.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Frances E. Taylor, accompanying Senate bill S. 4853, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, copies of the same to be left in the files, as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXX.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 14184. An act to extend the irrigation act to the State of Texas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation.

H. R. 17757. An act extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11565. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Brinker was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN CALIFORNIA.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 140) providing relief to the sufferers in California was read twice by its title.

Mr. PERKINS. Inasmuch as the Senate has passed an appropriate joint resolution making an appropriation of a definite sum, I think this joint resolution may temporarily lie upon the table until we know the action to be taken by the House upon the Senate joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY AND SALE OF POISONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8997) regulating the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BURKETT, and Mr. MARTIN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLMENTS AND LICENSES OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 16133) to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FRYE. That bill is exactly the same in effect and in words as the one which passed the Senate a considerable time ago. I ask that it may be put upon its passage.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to consolidate into one document in the case of any vessel of the United States of 20 net register tons or over, the form of enrollment prescribed by section 4319 of the Revised Statutes and the form of license prescribed by section 4321 of the Revised Statutes, and such consolidated form shall hereafter be issued to a vessel of the United States in lieu of the separate enrollment and license, now prescribed by law, and shall be deemed sufficient compliance with the requirements of laws relating to the subject.

SEC. 2. That section 4325 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read:

"SEC. 4325. The license granted to any vessel shall be presented for renewal by endorsement to the collector of customs of the district in which the vessel then may be within three days after the expiration of the time for which it was granted, or, if she be absent at that time, within three days from her first arrival within a district. In case of change of build, ownership, district, trade, or arrival under temporary papers in the district where she belongs the license shall be surrendered. If the master shall fail to deliver the license he shall be liable to a penalty of $10, which shall not be mitigated."

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to amend any law now in force concerning the compensation of officers of the customs for service connected with the enrollment and license of vessels.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect on and after January 1, 1907.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 4886, a bill of a similar nature, was passed, and I move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 4886 was passed, and moves that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4952) making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River, returned from the House of Representatives at the request of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 4250, in reference to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4250) to further enlarge the powers and authority of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and to impose further duties thereon.

Mr. MORGAN. The House of Representatives has stricken out all of the Senate bill except the enacting clause, and has sent us a bill which is a substitute for that. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like that matter to lie on the table and be printed. It is not a case where the other body has amended and changed certain features, but has substituted an entirely new bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; an entirely new bill.

Mr. HALE. I do not want the matter to go to conference until it has been printed and Senators can see what the new bill is.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I ask that the bill may be printed and laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and laid on the table, in the absence of objection.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rise to correct a statement which appears in the Washington Post of this morning. In its account of a conference held by Democratic Senators yesterday it says, among other things:

> The principal differences in the conference were precipitated by a speech made by Senator BAILEY, that his court feature provided for a limited review. Exception was taken by his colleague, Senator CULBERSON, who declared that it was a broad review, and from this point the discussion passed to the several pending amendments to prevent restraining orders being issued to interfere with rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. President, of course I understand how inexcusable it would be for any Senator to abuse the patience and consume the time of the Senate in correcting the numerous and unavoidable mistakes which are made by even the most intelligent and conscientious reporters; but this seems to be rather an exceptional case, because as this paper is printed here at the seat of government, and as it is generally so careful and accurate, editors throughout the country might well be misled into accepting this statement as true, while in fact it does not bear a resemblance to the truth.

In the conference of yesterday I carefully avoided complicating the question of prohibiting preliminary injunction with any other question, and I did that so that we might have the sense of the Senators who had assembled there upon that separate and independent question. There are differences enough among Democratic Senators without misrepresenting and exaggerating them.

While I am on my feet, I desire to say a word, and only a word, about the court provision in the amendment which I had the honor to offer to the bill. When that entire amendment was at first submitted, the principal, and in fact I might say the only attack upon it was directed against the proviso which prohibited the courts from suspending the orders of the Commission by interlocutory or preliminary injunction. When that attack was made, and was answered, at least to the satisfaction of all Democratic Senators with three or four exceptions, then its critics began to assert that its court provision was altogether too broad.

How any man could have reached that conclusion I am unable to understand; and I am confident that any man who understands the English language can be made to see that it is the narrowest one which has been proposed, or even suggested, that would stand the test of a judicial scrutiny under the Constitution. Certainly I endeavored to make it as narrow as it could be made without making it unconstitutional, and if any Senator in this body will propose an amendment or a substitute that narrows it without invalidating it, I pledge him my support in his effort to have it adopted.

It is my opinion that the Commission is better qualified than any court to judge and to decide what are just and reasonable railroad rates, and in accordance with that opinion my purpose has been to commit as much power to the Commission and as little power to the court as is consistent with the requirement of the Constitution.

I think, Mr. President, this much ought to be said in answer, not only to this, but to many other misstatements which have been published about the proceedings of that conference.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to correct another error which came into history in regard to the transaction of the conference, and I want to say further that there was no excuse for any of these errors, because half a dozen or more correspondents came into my committee room after the conference adjourned and I gave out an accurate and a more or less circumstantial statement of what had transpired.

The error to which I wish to allude and correct is that in some of the newspaper reports which I have seen it has been declared that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] took advantage of the temporary absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and moved to adjourn the caucus. That does the Senator from Maryland a grave injustice, because he is incapable of taking advantage of anybody. When the poll was had, which I took myself by going around and checking off the sentiment or the position of every Senator present, we had accomplished all that we had ever undertaken; and that was, to find out just how Senators stood on that proviso at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he has any objection to putting in the RECORD the official report of this conference?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina will inform the Senator from Rhode Island that at the proper time, when a vote on that amendment comes before the Senate, that will go into the RECORD in the official proceedings.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator said he had informed a limited number of newspaper correspondents of what was done.

Mr. TILLMAN. Everybody who asked for it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think, certainly, the Senate ought to be treated with an equal amount of sincerity, and that the Senator should state to the Senate just what occurred.

Mr. BAILEY. With the permission of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I wish to say that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] does not appear to need that enlightenment, because within the last week he volunteered to us the information that we could only have twenty-five votes on this side of the Chamber for this amendment, and he appears to have known what he was talking about.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think very likely he did, Mr. President, and I will state to the Senator that I believe my information on that subject was accurate, and I think the result will show it. But that is a little aside from what we now have in hand; which is to get this matter of what took place at this conference before the Senate and before the country in an authentic way.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why does the Senator from Rhode Island want it before the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because I should like to know what took place, as we have two Senators here disclaiming one report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was disclaiming a newspaper statement, not a report.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is any official report—the Senator has already said that he gave out to a certain number of newspaper correspondents a correct statement—I think we ought to have the benefit of that information.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that this division among the Democrats is the first crumb of comfort the Senator from Rhode Island has had since this bill came before the Senate, and he ought not to be denied the full enjoyment of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that is true. I have been in the Senate for quite a number of years, and there always have been on that side and on this such differences; but I think it is quite fair, so long as this disclaimer has taken place, that we should be advised of the accuracy as to the statement made through the newspapers.

Mr. BAILEY. The only trouble with the Senator from Rhode Island and his party associates is that they dare not go into caucus because, if they did, they would have to get a fireproof curtain to prevent a disaster if they should talk in such a caucus as they do in private conversation. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the fact that we have had no conference, and that conferences are not necessary, on this side, shows that the condition is not quite so radical and not quite so spectral as is suggested to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Rhode Island will know in full time how the Democrats in the Senate will vote on this question. He need not fret; he can possess his soul in patience;

but I think I can assure him that he will not be very well pleased at the outcome when the vote is taken. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the matter to which I wanted to get the attention of the Senate does not refer to the rate bill, but refers to a brief colloquy which I had the day before yesterday with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in regard to the John R. Walsh bank failure in Chicago. It will be remembered that in the resolution which I had the honor to introduce among other subjects for investigation was the failure of the Walsh bank and the action of the associated banks of Chicago in assuming the liabilities of the Walsh bank, guaranteeing full payment of all the debts and taking charge of all the properties, including, as I have found out since, three railroads. The subject seemed to me one eminently proper for the Committee on Finance to examine into and to determine whether or no the law had been broken. In the colloquy I asked the Senator from Illinois whether or not the grand jury had indicted Mr. Walsh. He said most positively, "No," but he acted with some disingenuousness, if I may say it with due respect, because he did not go on to give the Senate the full benefit of his information. I have since discovered that while the Senator was entirely correct technically in stating that Walsh had not been indicted by the grand jury, this is the condition of affairs; and that is what I had in mind when I asked the question. In other words, Mr. Walsh has been arrested upon the report of bank examiners; he is out under bond; and in the meantime he has had five separate and distinct postponements of the inquiry instituted by the district attorney in reference to Walsh's criminality; and I wish to have read here the news service of the Chicago Record-Herald, which is not a "muck raker," showing what is considered to be correct information in the city of Chicago itself in reference to this Walsh banking business. I ask that the Secretary read the paragraph through which a blue pencil has been run.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

John R. Walsh, whose arrest on March 9 on the charge of violating the Federal banking laws while he was president of the Chicago National Bank caused a sensation in the financial world, was given a fifth postponement of his preliminary hearing yesterday morning before United States Commissioner Mark A. Foote. The case was continued to May 3. District Attorney Morrison stated that the continuance had been granted so that all the evidence might be presented to the next Federal grand jury, which will convene May 15, regardless of whether, in the meantime, any hearings were held before the commissioner.

The unusual delay in the case, the remarkable courtesies extended to Mr. Walsh in the Federal building, and the ready acquiescence of the Government officials in postponements of the hearing combined to lend color to the report that the ex-banker had powerful political influences behind him at Washington.

"PULL" WITH SENATORS?

His "pull," according to general understanding, reached to United States Senators and some of the most prominent officials in touch with the Department of Justice. It was even rumored on the street that Mr. Walsh never would be brought to trial on the charge that he had made a false report of the condition of his banks a few days prior to the crash.

The motion for a continuance was made yesterday by Assistant District Attorney Childs. Hitherto the requests for postponement have been made by Mr. Walsh's attorneys, and have met with no opposition from the Government. This time Mr. Childs, in explanation of his motion for a continuance, stated that Mr. Walsh's lawyers had filed a detailed answer to the charges in the complaint. The answer, or statement, is said to be a denial of the charge that the funds of the bank had been juggled, and a showing in support of the claim that all the memorandum notes involved in the failure of the Walsh banks were covered by valid securities.

INQUIRY TO BE SECRET.

The probability of witnesses disappearing before this statement from Walsh can be thoroughly examined was a topic of discussion yesterday among lawyers, after it had been announced by Mr. Childs that it would require several weeks of work by experts to determine its accuracy. This examination, which will be made in the district attorney's office behind closed doors, may determine the whole case, and even keep it out of the grand jury room, it is claimed by some of Walsh's friends.

RECORD OF CONTINUANCES.

Mr. Walsh's case is now in the hands of Mr. Morrison, as a matter of fact, although it seems to be before Commissioner Foote. The record of the case since the day of the banker's arrest is as follows:

March 10.—Continuance granted to March 19 on the argument of Walsh's lawyers that they had not had time to prepare for a hearing; no objection by the attorney for the Government.

March 19.—Continuance granted on the ground that Mr. Walsh's lawyer, W. T. Abbott, was out of the city on legal business.

March 27.—Attorney Abbott was granted another continuance after pleading that he had been out of the city and had not had time to prepare a defense; case set for April 6.

April 6.—Continuance asked on the ground that the defense was not ready for the hearing, and date set for April 16 without opposition on the part of the Government.

April 16.—Continuance granted on the motion of Assistant District Attorney Childs until May 3, with the stipulation that a further continuance of ten days might be granted at that time if the examination of the books was not completed on that date.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have here another clipping from the Chicago Daily News of April 17, in which appears, under the head of "Other Phases of the Situation," the following:

It was also reported to-day:

That the clearing-house banks faced a deficit, as predicted by financiers quoted in the Daily News February 13.

That the trunk lines contemplating purchase of the Walsh lines had pooled their interests to keep the bid on the Walsh roads to the lowest possible figure.

That a legal obstacle preventing the Lake Shore from bidding because the Indiana Southern parallels it tended to aid the alleged pool.

That stringency in the money market also made it difficult to secure bids.

The most sensational development of the day was the statement that the directors and stockholders of the bank might prove to be the owners of the railroads instead of Walsh personally, as had been supposed. It has not heretofore been hinted that the written defense contained such an assertion, which is equivalent to charges that the bank directors committed illegal acts. A bank may not own real estate under the statutes.

Farther down I find the following:

STATUS OF THE WALSH ASSETS.

The assets of John R. Walsh are entirely contingent upon what the railroads will bring. At first the bankers in charge of the assets asked $27,500,000 for the Indiana Southern, the Chicago and Southern, and the Illinois Southern. This price was reduced subsequently to $25,000,000. The railroads have made no bids up to date. At $25,000,000 it would be possible, it is figured, to pay off the obligations incurred with the clearing-house banks, give the stockholders in the Chicago National bank book value ($284 a share) for their holdings, and leave Walsh personally $1,000,000. At a valuation of $21,000,000 the clearing-house banks would get out whole, but nothing would be left to Walsh or the stockholders.

Here is rather an interesting subject:

PRACTICALLY ON HIS OWN BONDS.

It was discovered to-day that John R. Walsh is practically on his own bonds in the criminal charges preferred against him. The Illinois Surety Company, which he organized with Fred M. Blount, in which he is a director and in which Senator ALBERT J. HOPKINS is vice-president, went the financier's bail to the extent of $50,000. The company is known as the "bonding trust" in the Federal building, and is given the "inside track" on every possible occasion.

In another paper, the Chicago Examiner, I find the statement made that—

It is known by this newspaper that Senator CULLOM and JOSEPH CANNON, Speaker of the House of Representatives, have made repeated calls on the President of the United States in behalf of Mr. Walsh. Mr. Walsh's newspaper all along has essayed to represent the Federal Administration. Three years ago it switched from an alleged Democratic sheet to a howling apologist for the Republicans. The cause of this change was because Walsh sought then, as he seeks now, to control Government contracts for his Bedford quarries. In that he has succeeded splendidly. Few other quarrymen now have the courage to bid against him. They know it were futile to get a building's stone away from him.

It will be remembered that ALBERT J. HOPKINS, the junior Illinois Senator, was in Chicago on the day of the failure of the Chicago National Bank. He was among the first to make a friendly call on Walsh. Then came Secretary Shaw. He, too, visited the dethroned king of Monroe street. Subsequently Comptroller Ridgely was here. Then eminent Chicago financiers went to Washington. And they saw the President, too.

Now, these continued delays in preparing the case for the grand jury and the charge, that is more or less directly made, that there is an effort being put forth by political influences to have this man go scot-free, without facing a jury and going through a trial, just as District Attorney Jerome wanted to let this man Perkins—I believe it is, in New York, go without a trial—appears to be going on in Chicago. In other words, we have reached that pass in this country that if a man steals a ham or a pair of shoes he is hustled off immediately to the police court, tried the next morning, and sent to prison. But if a man owns five millions, why, they dodge around and notify him that they will be glad to call around with a warrant at his office at such time as may be convenient to see him about whether he shall go to court or not; and if he is worth twenty-five millions, or in possession of it, they practically do nothing.

I think it is time for the Committee on Finance to investigate some of these matters in Chicago, and if these are falsehoods, prove it. The country is interested in having the big thieves punished just as much as it is in having the little thieves punished. If a lawbreaker who is in the millionaire class has to be treated with such deference and consideration as this, while, as I said, a poor fellow puts on his stripes and goes to breaking stone, we ought to have the country know why it is done.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] does not controvert any statement that I made the other day respecting the condition of the so-called "Walsh bank," or the attitude of the Chicago banks through the clearing house, or the assets of the companies, or as to the question as to whether Mr. Walsh was indicted or not. Not one of my statements is controverted. The Senator has picked up now some statements from the newspapers and attempts a new attack upon me. My first answer to him is this: That I find that both he and the leader on the Democratic side this morning have challenged the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that these reports in the newspapers are absolutely unreliable, and that they want the Senate to understand that those statements must not be taken so far as they are concerned. Now, that line of argument will apply equally when you come to a question that affects the interests of the city of Chicago or the great banking interests there, or the two Senators from that State.

I am unable, Mr. President, to understand the motive that can prompt the Senator from South Carolina, morning after morning here, like a modern Don Quixote, to get astride his steed and bring some question into the Senate that has no relation to the legislation before this body or before Congress for the simple purpose of exploiting himself, attracting the attention of the galleries, and getting a little attention through the newspapers of the country. I can not understand, Mr. President, why it is that a man living in the section that he does, representing the constituency that we know he represents, should so concern himself as to whether the law in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, is obeyed. I intimated to him the other day that the 2,000,000 people living within the limits of that splendid city are quite capable of taking care of themselves, and when he spoke about the action of the clearing-house committee of the banks of Chicago I challenged his attention as to what provision of the law had been violated by that association of bankers. He was unable to reply. He simply had a hazy notion about something that he supposed would enable him to say something sensational upon this floor and again get applause from the galleries.

When I called his attention to the facts as to the character of the assets and that the associated banks were furnishing quick assets, he seemed to know as little about banking proceedings as he evidently did about law and legal procedure when he questioned me about the indictment of Mr. Walsh.

Now, I think it is about time, Mr. President, that the country should know something about who this modern reformer is, this man that is seeking to pillory every other locality as dishonest, and every other man before the public as a dishonest man and a violator of the law. I think it is about time that the Senate and the country should know something about him. Who is he, and where does he come from? He comes from the State of South Carolina—a State I find, Mr. President, with a white population of 557,000 and with a colored population of 782,000. It is known the country over that the Senator owes his seat in this body to the suppression of the colored vote in that State. It is known here, and it is known, I say, in every section of our common country, that the majority of the people of that State, by the manipulations of the Senator from South Carolina and the men who associate with him in that State, have been deprived of their rights, civil and political, that have been guaranteed to them under the Constitution of our common country.

Mr. President, the Senator himself, in a speech in this body on the 24th day of February, 1900, made this statement in the Senate:

> I know nothing about other States, but I acknowledge openly and boldly in the sight of God that we did our level best to keep every negro in our State from voting.

Does the Senator deny that he made that statement in the open Senate?

Mr. TILLMAN. Why should I deny it, when I put it in the RECORD and am ready to repeat it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator talk about people violating the law of Illinois or the national banks there not living up to it, when he admits that he has helped to deny to the majority of the people of his State one of the most sacred rights of an American citizen—the privilege of going to the polls and voting and the privilege of selecting the men who shall represent them in the State legislature, in the various county offices, and in the Senate of the United States? Does anybody believe that if the seven hundred and some odd thousand colored men in the State of South Carolina had the political rights that are guaranteed to the colored men of Illinois and to all the people of every State, that the Senator would be here upon this floor denouncing Mr. Walsh, of Chicago, or the national banks of that city for their splendid financiering the other day? Does anybody believe that?

Now, I want to call his attention to some other things, Mr. President. A year or more ago he was making some speeches over the country. The question came up about some lynchings that were had in some of the Northern States, where colored men had been deprived in a most savage manner, not only of their liberty, but of their lives, where those colored men had been placed at the stake and burned. That is a blot upon the civilization of our country. Did the Senator then reprobate such conduct as that? Did he want to see the laws of our country obeyed? Did he insist that the courts should be the ones to determine the punishment which should be inflicted upon the violators of the law? Not at all. He advocated mob law. He advocated the taking of the lives of those people.

Now, inasmuch as he has quoted from the Chicago papers relating to this matter, I will quote——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOPKINS. I will quote what is put in quotations here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will save the Senator the trouble, if he will give me leave, to repeat it here a hundred times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from South Carolina can have his time. I quote from one of the Chicago papers he has been reading here this morning. This is the language quoted that the Senator used in speaking of some of the lynchings:

> That seems to be the only practical way until the amendment of the Constitution granting the negroes suffrage has been repealed. We have shot 'em and hanged 'em and burned 'em in South Carolina—

He bows his head to that. My God, Mr. President, think of a man in the Senate of the United States who can bow approval to the fact that a human being is placed at a stake and burned alive in the twentieth century of our civilization! Think of a man, Mr. President, think of a Senator who for a moment can give his approval to such barbarous and atrocious conduct as that, and, as is suggested to me, then talk about the law being enforced if there should be an infraction of the smallest kind against the national-bank law of the United States.

How is a little money of a national bank, Mr. President, to be compared with the life of an American citizen? How is the violation of the law by one national bank to be compared with a condition in any section of our common country where men, without any opportunity to show their innocence, are taken by a mob and placed upon a pile of fire and burned? That is one of the things to which the Senator here to-day gives his approval.

> We have shot 'em and hanged 'em and burned 'em in South Carolina until they almost know their proper place now, although the desire to vote, whether or not they know what they are voting for or against, frequently causes trouble.

Mr. President, I have said this much because I have grown tired of the Senator from South Carolina getting up morning after morning and insisting that people in this section of the country are violating the law, or that this class of American citizens are violating the law, and that he is the man above all men to whom it has been given to see that the law in all sections of our common country is obeyed. When all the people of South Carolina shall enjoy the rights and privileges granted to them under our Constitution, when we may say upon this floor that the courts are open to protect the rights of all, great and small, rich and poor, in South Carolina, as they are in Illinois, then I will listen with some patience to a criticism of me and my people and with the manner in which the law is administered in Chicago. But until that time, Mr. President, I protest against such a Senator as that claiming that the law is not properly and fully administered in the city in which I live.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have never been in court except as a spectator, but I have noticed that it is a common practice among old lawyers, when they have a very poor case, to raise Cain with the attorney on the other side. They indulge in all manner of abuse and inject other questions into the controversy.

I should like to ask the Senator, as he would not let me interrupt him a moment ago, if the statement that I just read from the Chicago paper is false? Is he the vice-president of the surety company which is on John R. Walsh's bond?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, what has that to do with the subject?

Mr. TILLMAN. Answer "yes" or "no," please.

Mr. HOPKINS. I might just as well ask as to whether the Senator sleeps with a nightcap. It would be just as pertinent.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is dodging now. He is dodging and quibbling.

Mr. HOPKINS. I decline to answer a question that has no bearing upon this subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, I take that as a confession that the Senator is the vice-president of that surety company; and that is proof positive of the other allegations here that he is exerting his official power to endeavor to suppress the indictment and call off the myrmidons of the law in prosecuting Walsh for breaking the law.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TILLMAN. Always. I have great respect for the Senator.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I heard read from one of those papers a statement that the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who happens to be an Illinoisan, and myself were frequently at the White House in behalf of Mr. Walsh since he has been arrested. I want to say to the Senator and to the country that I have not been to the President in behalf of Mr. Walsh at any time, I have never said a word to him on the subject, and have never seen Mr. Walsh since this happened.

Mr. TILLMAN. I expected as much, and was sorry that the Senator's name was in the paper; but I did not want to misquote it, and therefore I had to read it along with the statement in regard to the junior Senator from Illinois. Will he be equally frank now, and tell us whether he has been around anywhere trying to get this indictment stopped? [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate they must avoid all manifestations of approval or disapproval.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can be as explicit as my colleague [Mr. CULLOM]. I have seen nobody to use any influence in Mr. Walsh's behalf, and I have not seen Mr. Walsh since the day of the failure, or so-called failure, till this day. I have had no communication with him directly or indirectly, and have had nothing to do with it whatever. This statement simply emphasizes the absolutely unreliable character of the stuff that the Senator is morning after morning sending out to the people of the country by having it read at the Secretary's desk or reading it himself.

There is one other thing, while I am upon my feet, that I want to call to the attention of the Senate to show the character and fairness of this so-called "reformer," who is undertaking to take me to task for something that he alleges that I may have done. He has suggested that I am trying to evade the issue. I am doing nothing of the kind. I called attention to the fact that every statement that I made the other day has not been disputed by him or by anybody representing any of the newspapers of the city of Chicago.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment, if the Senator will allow me. I want to show another thing while I am upon the floor. The Senator the other day asked me as to whether an indictment had been found against Mr. Walsh—this was the question: "Has Mr. Walsh been indicted by the grand jury for anything or not?" I stated that he had not. Now, the Senator this morning undertakes to say that I was not entirely frank in that, and to take me to task upon a question of that kind. Let us see what kind of fairness emanates from the Senator from South Carolina; let us see how he wants the RECORD to appear. I have here the stenographic notes, taken by the Reporter here, which were presented to the Senator. The question that was put to me was this: "Has Mr. Walsh been indicted by the grand jury for anything or not?" My answer was, "No, sir." When the Senator came to revise his remarks, he changed that question, and made it entirely different, so as to put me in exactly the position that he now seeks to put me in his argument this morning. He changed the word "for" to "or," and he eliminated the words "or not" and put in "like that;" so that the question as it appeared in the RECORD reads:

Has Mr. Walsh been indicted by the grand jury, or anything like that?

Evidently, Mr. President, preparing by the RECORD at some future time to show that I had not been entirely frank. Is that the kind of fairness that emanates from the Senator from South Carolina? Does he think that was dealing squarely and fairly with me, after the debate was over and the notes had been prepared containing that statement, to change the character of the question, without calling my attention to the answer, and putting me in the position of denying that an indictment had been found "or anything like that?"

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, will the Senator send the notes here and let me see how many interpolations he made?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir. I will send them to you, and you will find that every interpolation that I made was something that did not touch a question that the Senator had asked, and was simply to develop the thought that I had expressed in the debate here. He can read every one of them, if he wants to, and he will not find one that changes a sentiment or that puts him in a false attitude, as he undertook to put me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit to Senators whether or not the change I made made any substantial difference in the sense or in the character of the inquiry.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why did you make it, then?

Mr. TILLMAN. Because I wanted to make my thought clear, just as you tried to make your thoughts clear.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; you tried to put me in a position so that my answer would seem to be an evasion. That is what you tried to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the effect of it, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is shying from spooks. There are enough actual rascalities here not to touch on any of these side issues.

Mr. HOPKINS. There are enough actual rascalities, aye, enough, Mr. President; there are enough crimes in South Carolina to take the entire time of the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. Whenever the Senator wants to discuss the race question, I am ready to meet him in Chicago or anywhere else; and it is not seemly, in my judgment, for him to try to drag in here a condition that has nothing whatever to do with this matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think it is seemly for the Senator to make an assault here on the banks of the city of Chicago, that every business man from the Atlantic to the Pacific will praise for their splendid conduct in financing the situation in that crisis.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those banks have broken the law, I think.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator admits upon this floor that he has broken the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not done anything of the kind.

Mr. HOPKINS. You admit that you have kept the colored men in South Carolina from exercising the political rights that are guaranteed to them under the Constitution of our common country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Just as your party have refused to give to the Filipinos and these other colored people that you have annexed a recognition here under the Constitution. Hypocrisy is too much abroad in the land on that side in regard to the colored people for you to dare to get up here and speak that way about the South.

Mr. HOPKINS. But, Mr. President, the hypocrisy is in attempting to nullify the amendments of the Constitution of the United States and denying to a majority of the people of his State their political rights, and then to glory in burning them at the stake.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never gloried in it. I have simply said—and I acknowledge that I said it—that whenever a white woman is ravished we sometimes burn the brutes who perpetrate such crimes; and if the white men of the North are too pusillanimous to protect their wives and daughters from such doings, God have mercy on them.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am speaking of the vote, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Ah, yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. When he speaks of the people of the North, I want to say that the people of the North are law-abiding people, and if a crime is committed the criminal is punished and sent to the penitentiary or executed, as he ought to be in South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. What about the Springfield, Ohio, occurrence the other week?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Ohio can speak for that.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. There was something that occurred in Springfield, Ohio, that we all very much regret, but the machinery of the law was immediately put into operation to arrest every man who violated the law in connection with it, and the majesty of the law was vindicated. But what occurred at Springfield, Ohio, had its counterpart, I notice, at Springfield, Mo., the other day, and I rejoice in the fact that at the head of the government of the State of Missouri is a man in the person of Governor Folk, who did not hesitate to put into operation, in a most unqualified way, the machinery of the law to punish the perpetrators of those great crimes that were there committed. I wish the Senator could say so much as to violations of a similar character in his own State.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the conditions in Ohio were the same as they are with us with an absolute majority of 235,000 more negroes than there are white people in the State, if your civilization were in jeopardy and in danger of being obliterated, as the effort was made in the reconstruction days to obliterate ours, your people in Ohio would do just as bad or worse than we ever thought of doing.

Mr. FORAKER. I ought to add one other thing, that no Senator from the State of Missouri, or from any other State in this Union in which such crimes have been committed, has stood up here to justify or to defend any such crimes, except only the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina——

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say it to the country—for it will go to the country, because I think it is due to the Senators who represent the States of the South—that they have all alike, save only the Senator from South Carolina, stood here to denounce in the most unqualified terms such crimes as those.

I would not refer to this if the Senator did not compel me to do so by referring to my State and by referring to a circumstance that we greatly regret and as to which we have done all we could do to prevent and punish those responsible for it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to let the Senator from Illinois get off that lightly. He can not run off behind Springfield, Ohio, to dodge the issue.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Illinois is not running from the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to get back to the national bank business. I want to ask the Senator whether or not it is lawful for the associated banks to own these $27,000,000 worth of railroads?

Mr. HOPKINS. The question, Mr. President, I want to know is whether the Senator thinks it is lawful, as he says, "to shoot them"——

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. HOPKINS. And hang them and burn them in South Carolina until they are afraid to go to the polls to vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that there is no question pending before the Senate. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has given notice of a speech which he is ready to deliver.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate. It was laid before the Senate at the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. And the Senator from South Carolina took the floor in his own right, not with anybody's consent, and the Senator from South Carolina will sit down when he gets ready, unless the Chair or the Senate orders him to.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that this discussion is not only technically not in order, but that it is entirely out of order, and that the Senator from Wisconsin ought to be permitted to proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to give the Senator from Wisconsin an opportunity to go on just as soon as I can, and I am willing to let the matter rest right now. I simply asked the Senator from Illinois whether it was lawful for these associated banks to own this twenty-seven million and a half dollars' worth of railroads and be hawking them about the markets trying to sell them in order to get back something which they had guaranteed to Walsh's creditors.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator from South Carolina were familiar with business affairs as they are conducted all over the country, if he knew anything about the banking business, and he knew anything about the office of the clearing house, he never would ask that question. There is not a Senator upon this floor that knows anything about the office of a clearing house but that will say that that was an entirely legitimate act upon the part of the Chicago banks and that no law regarding the national banks has been violated. That is my answer to the Senator upon that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why did you not make that answer first, instead of talking about the law in regard to negroes in South Carolina?

Mr. President, all I wanted to do was to have the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and his committee, if it will, institute an examination to ascertain whether or not the national banking law has been violated; whether the transaction in regard to the clearing house assuming Walsh's debts and acting as receiver for his estate had in any way violated the law. That was all. But the Senator from Illinois got very angry and read me lecture yesterday and repeats it to-day; and when he can not meet the issue of the statements made in the Chicago newspapers he rushes off into a tirade against the suppression of the negro vote in the South and brings up some utterances of mine, in which I declared—and I repeat them here—that whenever a white woman is ravished in the country where there are nearly two negroes to one white woman, if we did not destroy the brute as soon as we got a chance our wives and daughters could not live there.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, it will not do for the Senator to get off on the sentiment of wife and daughter. He made the statement that I read to him, that they shot and burned negroes in the South to keep them from voting.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is entirely off. I deny it absolutely. We never burned any negro for that purpose.

Mr. HOPKINS. You so state in the article that I read here.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not use those words. I have never been chary about repeating what I have said right on this floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Have you ever attempted to have white men punished for killing colored men who sought to exercise the political rights that you enjoy in South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. Whenever a man has been shot down in South Carolina at the polls there has been some form of trial, the same as in Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; just the form, and that is all there was to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine will please state it.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Chair will maintain order here, as prescribed by the rules. The Senate, I think, is very tired of this, not debate, but wrangling back and forth between two Senators. I ask the Chair to enforce the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's point of order is well taken. The Chair will see that hereafter Senators address the Chair and obtain the consent of the Chair before proceeding to address the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in this connection I will ask that paragraph 1 of Rule XIX be read to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read paragraph 1 of Rule XIX.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I trust it will be enforced.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XIX.

1. When a Senator desires to speak, he shall rise and address the Presiding Officer, and shall not proceed until he is recognized, and the Presiding Officer shall recognize the Senator who shall first address him. No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the Presiding Officer; and no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me to be a pretty good time, after the reading of that rule, for me to address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for two hours and a half,

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin has been speaking for a considerable time, and no doubt he is fatigued. Therefore I think it would be more pleasant to him to defer the completion of his speech until to-morrow. If that is agreeable, I should like to have the unfinished business laid aside for the remainder of the day without losing its place.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am only partly through, Mr. President, and I should like to have the opportunity to go on to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The notice of the Senator from Wisconsin will be entered, and, in the absence of objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN CALIFORNIA.

During the delivery of Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S speech.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making an appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution No. 48.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making an appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster; which were, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to procure, in open market or otherwise, subsistence and quartermaster's supplies in addition to such supplies belonging to the military establishment, and available, and issue the same to such destitute persons as have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the earthquake which occurred April 18 and the attending conflagration, and in executing this joint resolution the Secretary of War is directed to cooperate with the authorities of the State of California and the mayors of the cities of San Francisco, Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda, and such other cities on the Pacific coast as may have sustained damages.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Commerce and Labor are hereby directed to cooperate with the Secretary of War in extending relief and assistance to stricken people herein referred to, to the extent of the use of the naval vessels, revenue cutters, and other vessels, and Government supplies under their control on the Pacific coast.

Be it further resolved, That to enable the Secretary of War to execute the provisions of this joint resolution there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Strike out the preamble.

Amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast."

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

After Mr. LA FOLLETTE had yielded the floor,

RIGHT OF APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith a letter of the Attorney-General, inclosing a statement of the proceedings by the United States against the individuals and corporations commonly known as the "beef packers," and commenting upon the decision of District Judge Humphrey. The result has been a miscarriage of justice. It clearly appears from the letter of the Attorney-General that no criticism whatever attaches to Commissioner Garfield. What he did was in strict accordance with the law and in pursuance of a duty imposed on him by Congress, which could not be avoided; and, of course, Congress in passing the Martin resolution could not possibly have foreseen the decision of Judge Humphrey.

But this interpretation by Judge Humphrey of the will of the Congress, as expressed in legislation, is such as to make that will absolutely abortive. Unfortunately there is grave doubt whether the Government has the right of appeal from this decision of the district judge. The case well illustrates the desirability of conferring upon the Government the same right of appeal in criminal cases, on questions of law, which the defendant now has, in all cases where the defendant had not been put in jeopardy by a trial upon the merits of the charge made against him. The laws of many of the States, and the law of the District of Columbia, recently enacted by the Congress, give the Government the right of appeal. A general law of the character indicated should certainly be enacted.

Furthermore, it is very desirable to enact a law declaring the true construction of the existing legislation, so far as it affects immunity. I can hardly believe that the ruling of Judge Humphrey will be followed by other judges; but if it should be followed, the result would be either completely to nullify very much, and possibly the major part, of the good to be obtained from the interstate-commerce law and from the law creating the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor; or else frequently to obstruct an appeal to the criminal laws by the Department of Justice. There seems to be no good reason why the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the Interstate Commerce Commission each should not, for the common good, proceed within its own powers without undue interference with the functions of the other. It is, of course, necessary, under the Constitution and the laws, that persons who give testimony or produce evidence as witnesses should receive immunity from prosecution. It has hitherto been supposed that the immunity conferred by existing laws was only upon persons who, being subpœnaed, had given testimony or produced evidence as witnesses relating to any offense with which they were, or might be, charged. But Judge Humphrey's decision is, in effect, that, if either the Commissioner of Corporations does his duty, or the Interstate Commerce Commission does its, by making the investigations which they by law are required to make, though they issue no subpœna and receive no testimony or evidence, within the proper meaning of those words, the very fact of the investigation may of itself operate to prevent the prosecution of any offender for any offense which has been developed in even the most indirect manner during the course of the investigation, or even for any offense which may have been detected by investigations conducted by the Department of Justice entirely independently of the labors of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Commissioner of Corporations—the only condition of immunity being that the offender should have given, or directed to be given, information which related to the subject out of which the offense has grown.

In offenses of this kind it is at the best hard enough to execute justice upon offenders. Our system of criminal jurisprudence has descended to us from a period when the danger was lest the accused should not have his rights adequately preserved, and it is admirably framed to meet this danger. But at present the danger is just the reverse—that is, the danger nowadays is not that the innocent man will be convicted of crime, but that the guilty man will go scot-free. This is especially the case where the crime is one of greed and cunning perpetrated by a man of great wealth in the course of those business operations where the code of conduct is at variance not merely with the code of humanity and morality, but with the code as established in the law of the land. It is much easier, but much less effective, to proceed against a corporation than to proceed against the individuals in that corporation who are themselves responsible for the wrongdoing. Very naturally outside persons, who have no knowledge of the facts and no responsibility for the success of the proceedings, are apt to clamor for action against the individuals. The Department of Justice has, most wisely, invariably refused thus to proceed against individuals, unless it was convinced both that they were in fact guilty and that there was at least a reasonable chance of establishing this fact of their guilt. These beef-packing cases offered one of the very few instances where there was not only the moral certainty that the accused men were guilty, but what seemed, and now seems, sufficient legal evidence of the fact.

But in obedience to the explicit order of the Congress the Commissioner of Corporations had investigated the beef-packing business. The counsel for the beef packers explicitly admitted that there was no claim that any promise of immunity had been given by Mr. Garfield, as shown by the following colloquy during the argument of the Attorney-General:

"Mr. MOODY. * * * I dismiss almost with a word the claim that Mr. Garfield promised immunity. Whether there is any evidence of such a promise or not I do not know and I do not care.

"Mr. MILLER (the counsel for the beef packers). There is no claim of it.

"Mr. MOODY. Then I was mistaken, and I will not even say that word."

But Judge Humphrey holds that if the Commissioner of Corporations (and therefore if the Interstate Commerce Commission) in the course of any investigations prescribed by Congress asks any questions of a person not called as a witness, or asks any questions of an officer of a corporation not called as a witness, with regard to the action of the corporation on a subject out of which prosecutions may subsequently arise, then the fact of such questions having been asked operates as a bar to the prosecution of that person or of that officer of the corporation for his own misdeeds. Such interpretation of the law comes measurably near making the law a farce; and I therefore recommend that the Congress pass a declaratory act stating its real intention.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 18, 1906.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the objection to it is withdrawn, and so I should like to call up House concurrent resolution No. 29, which passed the House last Monday. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 16, 1906.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 5976, "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," the Clerk be directed to restore to the bill the part proposed to be stricken out in the amendment of the Senate No. 26 and to insert the following: On page 9, line 3, after the word "retaining," the words "tribal educational officers, subject to dismissal by the Secretary of the Interior," and restore to the bill the part proposed to be stricken out in the amendment of the Senate No. 27, and to insert in said amendment the following: On page 11, line 8, after the word "five," the words "and all such taxes levied and collected after the 31st day of December, 1905, shall be refunded."

After the word "shall," on page 11, line 16, insert "willfully and fraudulently."

After the word "punished," on page 11, line 21, insert "by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out in the amendment of the Senate No. 41 insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Secretary of the Interior shall take possession of all buildings now or heretofore used for governmental, school, and other tribal purposes, together with the furniture therein and the land appertaining thereto, and appraise and sell the same at such time and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and deposit the proceeds, less expenses incident to the appraisement and sale, in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the respective tribes: Provided."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 48) for the relief of the sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

Our Father in heaven, Thou grace divine, encircling all, help us with unshaken faith in Thine eternal love to interpret whatever comes to us in life as but a means to the proper end in the working out of Thy purposes. We thank Thee for that deep and tender sympathy which goes out to those who suffer affliction and sorrow, whether it be the community or the individual, and which binds us closer together as a people and as families in the ties of affection. Be with all, O God, who suffer everywhere and comfort them as Thou alone can, and help us to help each other, and so be with us all now in this great calamity and always in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. M. R. PATTERSON of Tennessee, appeared at the bar of the House, and qualified by taking the oath of office.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the Territories was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2948) to amend section 1 of the act approved March 3, 1905, providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of Arizona, and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KAHN, indefinitely, on account of the disaster at San Francisco.

MOVEMENTS OF VESSELS IN ST. MARYS RIVER.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4925) to amend the act approved March 6, 1896, relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved March 6, 1896, entitled "An act relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River" be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to adopt and prescribe suitable rules and regulations governing the movements and anchorage of vessels and rafts in St. Marys River from Point Iroquois, on Lake Superior, to Point Detour, on Lake Huron, and for the purpose of enforcing the observance of such regulations the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to detail one or more revenue cutters for duty under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor on said river."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the act of March 6, 1896, aforesaid, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in the event of the violation of any such regulations or rules of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor by the owners, master, or person in charge of such vessel, such owners, masters, or person in charge shall be liable to a penalty of $200: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may remit said fine on such terms as he may prescribe: Provided also, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend or repeal the act entitled 'An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal,' approved February 8, 1895."

With the following amendments:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "under the direction" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon the request."

Line 12 strike out the word "of" and insert the words "not exceeding."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4478) to amend section 64 of the bankruptcy act, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause 4 of subdivision B of section 64 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Fourth. Wages due to workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen, or servants which have been earned within three months before the date of commencement of proceedings, not to exceed $300 to each claimant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to know something in regard to this bill. Does it make the wages due all employees, including traveling salesmen, preferred claims against the bankrupt's estate?

Mr. ESCH. It simply includes traveling and city salesmen among those people who are entitled to preference. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and was unanimously reported a year ago. It has the support of the entire Traveling Men's Association of the United States and of the Credit Men's Association.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the bankruptcy act ought to be amended in many particulars, and I have not been able to catch from what the gentleman said or from the reading of the bill what the purport of it is. I think it ought to be amended in a great many particulars. The chief way that we ought to amend it is to wipe it off the statute books and repeal it altogether. If I had time I would draft a substitute amendment now to this bill, so as to repeal the bankruptcy law in toto. That is what I want to vote for. I do not think that I shall object to the consideration of this bill. I reserved the right to object to it in order to find out what it provides, and I would ask unanimous consent to have it read again, so that I can hear what are its provisions.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will again report the bill.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the bill, if the bankruptcy law is to remain in force, I am in favor of the bill that the gentleman has called up. I think it is a wise provision which ought not to have been omitted from the original bill. I shall not object, but shall support it. I shall vote for it, because this is the only way we can relieve the bankruptcy law, as it now exists, from the present provisions, which exclude this class of creditors from having a preferred claim upon the bankrupt's estate, as they should have. I think wages due the city and traveling salesmen should have preference in distribution of a bankrupt's estate. More than that, I think this House ought to have an opportunity to vote upon the proposition to repeal the bankruptcy law, because, in my judgment and in the judgment of a great many people, it has answered the purpose for which it was enacted. I shall not object, but will gladly support the measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NEBRASKA TERRITORIAL MILITIA.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5018) to give a true military status to the Nebraska Territorial Militia.

Whereas the governor and lawfully constituted authorities of the Territory of Nebraska did, on the 11th day of August, in the year of 1864, ask for and authorize the enlistment of volunteers to defend "the frontier" against hostile Indians and the common enemy; and

Whereas by proclamation duly issued of that date said call for volunteers was, at the suggestion of the authorities at Washington, based on the fact that the Government of the United States was engaged in war with the so-called "Southern Confederacy," and did not have sufficient troops for the common defense of our frontier, and that for such reasons said call for volunteers on behalf of the Territory of Nebraska was issued; and

Whereas said military organization, known as the "First Nebraska Volunteer Militia," consisting of Companies A, B, C, and D, and a battery of artillery, was enrolled and duly enlisted to serve four months unless sooner discharged; and

Whereas said military organization did serve the General Government from August, 1864, until January, 1865, rendering military service where and when required upon our public frontier in Nebraska, Colorado, and Kansas under the direction and control of the military authority of the United States exclusively; and

Whereas said troops have never been officially recognized as regular volunteers of the United States of America of the war of the rebellion, but have been denied such recognition: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the military organization known as Companies A, B, C, and D, and the battery of artillery thereof of the First Nebraska Volunteer Militia be, and the same is hereby, recognized as a regular volunteer organization of the United States of the war of the rebellion, and that the officers and privates thereof, including the widows and dependent children of such soldiers, are entitled to all the benefits of the pension laws as other regular volunteer organizations of the war of the rebellion.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

That all after the title of the bill be stricken out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

"Be it enacted, etc., That officers and enlisted men of military organizations which were furnished by any State or Territory under call made therefor by the President and the governor, and which rendered actual military service under the command of officers of the United States and in connection with the regular organized military forces of the United States, shall be entitled to certificates that they have rendered such service covering only the period that said organizations were in actual service; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue certificates of such service, upon due application and satisfactory proof of identity, for all honorably discharged members of the said organizations: Provided, That no person shall receive any pay, pension, bounty, or other allowances by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this bill ought to be considered in this way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was going to reserve the right to object to ask some questions.

PRESENTATION OF BELL TO SITE AND RELIC SOCIETY, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 7.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 7) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late U. S. sloop of war Germantown to the Site and Relic Society, of Germantown, Pa.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to present to the Site and Relic Society, of Germantown, Pa., the bell of the U. S. sloop of war Germantown, which vessel was destroyed by the United States authorities at the Norfolk Navy-Yard in 1861, and the bell of which was recovered about a year ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to answer the gentleman's question if I could hear him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say I ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, reserving the right to object, and would ask him to yield me about three minutes to make a statement.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will be very glad to do it. Three minutes' time, did you say?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Mr. Speaker, in that three minutes yielded me I desire to say I shall not object to the consideration of this particular bill, but there are nearly two millions of people out in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory begging for admission into the sisterhood of States; that there are tens, perhaps hundreds, of thousands of white children in the Indian Territory without public school facilities——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is there any question before the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have time yielded me.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask if the gentleman is in order?

The SPEAKER. And yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no time to yield, except in the nature of unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Therefore how could he yield for a speech?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yielded so there might be no objection to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how the House should be compelled to listen to a speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent, if it is necessary, to finish this statement; it will not be over a minute or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to finish the statement he is making. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker, to all of these requests—to each and every one of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. Is there objection now to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not object.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object unless the gentleman from Mississippi can have two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was that the bill I asked to be considered which was just passed?

The SPEAKER. That is the bill the gentleman called up. The Chair does not know what the gentleman intended to do.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FORT BRADY MILITARY RESERVATION AT SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of the military reservation known as Fort Brady, in the city (late village) of Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan, bounded on the north by that part of Water street adjacent to the Government park, on the east by Brady street, on the south by Portage avenue, and on the west by Bingham avenue, be, and the same is hereby, reserved from sale under the authority of the act of Congress authorizing the sale of Old Fort Brady, approved July 8, 1886, and that the same be set apart for a site for a public building at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I now ask unanimous consent for two minutes within which to complete a statement that I began to make to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. I hope the gentleman will reserve that.

RESERVATION AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8976) to change the line of the reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and of Reserve avenue, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the last objection, I demand the regular order.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18198—the District of Columbia appropriation bill. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the time for general debate be divided equally between the two sides, to be controlled for the minority by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and for the majority by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be divided equally and one-half of it controlled by himself and one-half of it controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18198—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I will now, whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] wills or not, complete the statement which I have started to make to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to call attention to how easy it is to comply with the rules of the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the gentleman can call my attention to all sorts of improbable suggestions and impossible things.

Now, Mr. Chairman, hundreds of thousands—tens of thousands, at any rate—of children are deprived of public school facilities in the Indian Territory. Nearly a million of people are asking to be admitted into the sisterhood of States. The Senate of the United States has passed a bill admitting Oklahoma and Indian Territory as a State into the Union. A perfectly puerile procedure of conference is now going on. Upon last Saturday, when the conferees were to have met, they did not meet, and the excuse for not having met was that some of them were not there. Now, I desire to give notice to the House that there will be from this time on no business done by unanimous consent [applause], and that no business of any sort will be done by this House except under the rules, or a rule, until the conferees upon the statehood bill report to this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very clear and comprehensive statement in reference to this bill made yesterday afternoon by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], I feel that it is wholly unnecessary for me to make a detailed statement about it at this time. In fact, any attempt to do so would merely result in a repetition of many statements already so well made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. I desire, however, to again direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill carries an appropriation amounting approximately, in round numbers, to $9,131,000. This is about $573,000 less than was carried in the District appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1906. It is also $2,300,000 less than the estimates submitted to the committee by the District Commissioners.

In this connection I desire to further call the attention of the committee to the fact that, whereas we have appropriated much less than was called for in the estimates, yet I assure you that your committee has exercised the greatest care to see that no department of the municipality has been given a less sum than is necessary for the proper and efficient discharge of the duties imposed upon that particular department. For myself and for the committee I invite the most careful scrutiny of the provisions of this bill. I go further. The Appropriation Committee will welcome any fair criticism of this measure as a whole or in its details, with a view of improving it, for I assure you that the committee, in the preparation of this bill, had only a single purpose in view, and that was to bring before the House the best bill that it could prepare. And in this connection, gentlemen, I desire to congratulate the House—yes, I desire to congratulate the city and the Government upon the fact that we have the very able and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts as the chairman of the subcommittee chargeable with the responsibility of this bill's preparation. He has brought to the consideration of the bill a zeal, an energy, an intelligence, and an honesty of purpose that have resulted, in my opinion, in one of the cleanest, fairest, and most evenly balanced District appropriation bills that has been brought before the Congress for many years. For this he is entitled to our highest commendation.

As I said, I do not care to make a detailed statement about the provisions of the bill, because to do so would only be to repeat what has been so well said by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. But, Mr. Chairman, while the subcommittee was engaged in preparing the various items that constitute the measure, a few thoughts occurred to me, which I have jotted down and upon which I desire to submit some observations, though I candidly state to you that what I will say is not exactly pertinent to the subject-matter under consideration.

No other city in all the United States is governed as this city is. Here, for reasons unnecessary to give, but which are apparently satisfactory to them, the people have voluntarily surrendered the right of suffrage, or rather, to more accurately describe the situation, the people have acquiesced without opposition in their own disfranchisement.

The experience of Washington City during the period when universal suffrage obtained here, when her people enjoyed without limitation the right of self-government, has not been forgotten. In fact, the property owners, the taxpayers, have such a lively recollection of those halcyon days that one never hears from one of them a murmur of complaint that the city is now governed by a Board of Commissioners in whose selection they have absolutely no voice.

When one remembers Washington as she was governed or when one thinks of Philadelphia as she is now governed, or rather was, until recently, when her mayor, a reformed Republican, commenced giving the people a more honest administration of city affairs, he can not fail to be impressed, in fact, must admit, that there are some advantages in municipal government by a Board of Commissioners. When one thinks of the saturnalia of vice and crime, the universality of loot and graft, the continuous and uninterrupted practices of thieving and boodling to which the unfortunate people and taxpayers of the City of Brotherly Love were so long the victims, then, indeed, can one see the advantage of and begin to appreciate the form of government for a municipality which obtains in our capital city.

The time was that whenever the thought of municipal government was suggested there naturally arose in the mind visions of extravagance and graft, high taxes, and even increasing bonded indebtedness.

Under the system of government which obtains here, which has also been adopted (with its principal objectionable feature eliminated—the appointment of the Commissioners) by two of the leading cities of Texas, these conditions are to a remarkable degree reversed. Because of the successful government of these cities under this plan I unhesitatingly state that other municipalities might very materially profit by the adoption of the best features of this form of municipal government which has proven so advantageous to them. Whatever complaint may be directed against the government of this city—and I do not say there is not some basis for complaint—it can not be truthfully charged that the one great evil which has proven a curse to so many of our cities has any foothold here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that there are now cities in Texas governed on the same plan as the District of Columbia and the city of Washington?

Mr. BURLESON. In Texas we have two cities, the city of Galveston and the city of Houston, now governed by boards of commissioners. There the boards of commissioners are elected by the people; and the experience of these cities in Texas under this form of municipal government is what directed my attention to the advantages of this system, to which I am now endeavoring to direct the attention of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the method proven satisfactory to those cities?

Mr. BURLESON. It has resulted in the complete elimination of graft, if graft could be said to exist in a Democratic city. This system of municipal government in Texas resulted in the reduction of city taxes; it has resulted in the reduction of bonded indebtedness, and it has resulted in a more general improvement of streets and other improvements than was ever known before in the history of either of those cities.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The very genial relations existing between the gentleman from Texas and myself prevent me from referring to any Democratic cities concerning which there has been something said about graft within the last two or three years.

Mr. BURLESON. I appreciate the great kindness and forbearance of the gentleman, and in further response to his query

I will state that only on the 3d day of this month the proper authorities of the largest city in Texas submitted the issue to the people—the qualified voters—whether they would abandon the present system of municipal government and adopt the commission form of governing the city, and at the election held for this purpose the people approved by a vote of over four to one, as I now recollect it, the commission form of government for the municipality.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For about twenty years, I think it is, we have had the same kind of government in Nashville, and I never heard of any graft. The people have ratified it time and again; they have changed the charter, but not the system. We do not have many holes in the streets in the heart of the city either.

Mr. BURLESON. I thank the gentleman for the benefit of that information. I am inclined to believe that government by a board of commissioners is the best form of municipal government ever devised, and am confident that before the lapse of twenty-five years the principal cities in the United States will substantially adopt this system or plan for their government.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have been interested in the gentleman's remarks on city government. Do I understand from the gentleman that these two cities in Texas are governed by commissioners elected by the people by a popular vote of the people?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; in Texas cities because of our constitution the board of commissioners are all elected at the same time, and every two years. They should be elected at different times, one commissioner every year, and probably it would be best to elect three commissioners with a tenure of office for three years. Originally, or the first time the commission form of government for a municipality was adopted in Texas, was at Galveston, immediately after the great flood which devastated that city in 1900, and the law as it passed our legislature required that they should be appointed by the governor. The superior court of Texas held that the provision authorizing the appointment of the commissioners by the governor was unconstitutional because of the wording of our organic law, but the same men that the governor had appointed were after this decision elected by the people with practically no opposition.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are they vested with the absolute and entire power of the government of the city?

Mr. BURLESON. With the full powers that are vested in a mayor and common council of the ordinary municipality.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And board of aldermen.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that any better form of government than where the mayor is elected by the people with absolute power? If it is, I would like to have the gentleman explain why a government by commissioners elected by a popular vote, who are subject to the influence of popular clamor, would be better than a government by a mayor who is also elected by popular vote.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman means whether a concentrated responsibility is better than a divided responsibility?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; I believe in a concentrated responsibility and therefore concentrated power. I want to know why commissioners can do better than a mayor, where both are elected by the people and are subject to those influences which seem to count for much with officials who are looking for reelection at short intervals.

Mr. BURLESON. For the reason that there is a division of responsibility. One man might not be able to discharge all the duties imposed upon him in the conduct of affairs of the municipality, but when you distribute the responsibility among three or five persons or commissioners they can then properly discharge the various functions imposed upon them.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They act by majority?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; in all matters of importance or in all matters except matters of routine.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Isn't it true that where you have four or five members with divided power and responsibility it tends to poorer government than where you have one vested with full power and held to strict accountability?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think the experiment has ever been made in the government of a city by one commissioner. We have three in Washington, five in Houston, and three in Galveston.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not a great difference between the government of these cities in Texas and the government here? For instance, in Texas these commissioners are responsible to the people who elect them, while in this city it is governed by a commission that is not responsible to the residents of the city, and is also governed to a large extent by Congress, that is largely indifferent to the wishes or the desires of the people of the community.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is correct, but as I said, an objectionable feature of this form of municipal government is the appointment of the Commissioners. In Texas we have eliminated that objectionable feature, and there the commissioners are accountable only to the people. They are not supervised by any legislative body, as is the case here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what I was about to state about Nashville. We elect the mayor, who has some appointing power and we elect three commissioners, one for two years, one for four years, and one for six years. It has done wonders for Nashville. It is satisfactory to the people, and the responsibility is divided just enough, with three commissioners and with the city council elected and with the mayor elected.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am very much interested in this question of municipal government, for the reason that several years ago I was appointed by the governor of our State one of five commissioners to draft a uniform charter for cities of the second class, including all the large municipalities except New York and Buffalo. We gave to the subject a large amount of time and study. We visited all the cities which the new charter was intended to cover, and listened to addresses on all phases of municipal government delivered by city officials and many public-spirited and well-informed citizens. It was the consensus of opinion of practically all the men who addressed our commission that the old charters then in force in nearly all those cities could be improved. According to those charters, boards of aldermen had large powers, executive as well as legislative. In some there were boards of fire commissioners, police commissioners, water commissioners, and commissioners of charity, and other boards discharging certain municipal functions, some of them intended to be bipartisan.

As a result of those hearings and our study of municipal government in this country and in Europe, we drafted a uniform charter, conferring upon the mayor very large powers and holding him responsible for results. It was our notion that where there are boards of three or five or a larger number of members there is a tendency to shift responsibility, whereas where a single individual is clothed with full power and held accountable for results the voters at the next election may know whom they should elect or defeat. The same plan, conferring power and responsibility, was carried out in the organization of the several departments of the cities, except as to the board of education, which was made to consist of several members.

This charter was afterwards adopted by the legislature of our State substantially as submitted by the commission, and is now the law for the government of those cities. It has not brought about all the reforms and good things hoped for it. Great power in the hands of an able and wise mayor produces very good results. But great power in the hands of a foolish or corrupt mayor is apt to result in very bad and very extravagant administration. In actual practice since the adoption of that uniform charter, with its large powers for good or ill, able and honest executives have given satisfactory government, while inefficient and dishonest executives have brought about results exactly the reverse.

According to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], the cities of Houston and Galveston, in his State, are governed by five and three commissioners, respectively, who are clothed with very large powers. Take the case of Houston, with five commissioners, and assuming that human nature is the same as it is in other States and cities and that those gentlemen are looking for reelection at the expiration of their several terms, it would seem that there would be a tendency to shirk or shift responsibility for doing things, which, although right, may at the time be unpopular with the masses of the electors.

Notwithstanding the gentleman's commendation of the city of Washington and his reference to the cities of Houston and Galveston, I am not convinced that a board of commissioners at the head of an ordinary city government would be apt to secure more economical or more efficient government than a single individual, especially if he is the right man.

It is generally conceded that municipal governments throughout the British Isles and the continent of Europe are far in advance of ours in most respects. Yet in those countries boards of commissioners, either elected or appointed, are not placed at the head of their city affairs. Generally very large powers are conferred on their mayors, or chief executive officers under whatever name, and by that method they are solving the very perplexing problem of modern city government more successfully than are we.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, responding further to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL], I will say that the commission should not be elected at the same time. If the commission consists of three, one should be elected each year, two of the commissioners being at all times beyond the reach of any clamor that might be directed toward controlling their action in any particular matter which might fasten the attention of the people.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How long were they elected for?

Mr. BURLESON. In Texas, as I have stated, for two years; but it would be a better plan to elect for three years, one to be elected each year. But to resume, whatever complaint may be directed against the government of this city—and I do not say there is not some basis for complaint—it can not truthfully be charged that the one great evil which has proven a curse to so many of our cities has any foothold here whatever.

It can be confidently asserted that the affairs of Washington, as administered by the Board of Commissioners, are entirely free of boodling and graft. There may be some unnecessary expenditures made in the conduct of city affairs, there may be some extravagance here, and for this the Commissioners are not always responsible, for frequently it is the fault of Congress; but boodling and grafting, which have so frequently resulted in the wicked waste of the public money in so many of our larger cities, is not to be found here.

Another matter brought to my attention during the preparation of this bill is the probable beneficial results from the ownership by a municipality of certain public utilities which, from their nature, are monopolies. The city of Washington and the Government own and operate the system or plant which furnishes the inhabitants of this city with their water.

The service is in every way satisfactory, and the people living here when the new filtration plant is completed will be furnished the best water accessible at a rate as low as it is reasonable for them to expect.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where will they get the water?

Mr. BURLESON. From the Great Falls of the Potomac River. The experience of the principal cities of Great Britain has conclusively demonstrated that it is to the general benefit, as well as the financial interest, of the people to own and operate certain public utilities.

The principal objection that has been urged in this country against municipal ownership and operation of these utilities has been that they could not be successfully managed or economically operated because of the resultant effect of the extravagance and corruption which follows the struggle of different factions or parties to control the city. I am free to admit that the dangers of graft in Philadelphia are so menacing that it would not be well to undertake municipal ownership in that city.

In New York and Chicago, under their present system of municipal government, with factions and parties engaged in a fierce struggle, at frequent intervals, to control, it would be nothing short of the sheerest nonsense to contend for one moment that it would be wise for those cities to take over the great and expensive transportation and lighting utilities now controlled and operated by private corporations, with the idea that the city could manage them with equal efficiency. On the contrary, Washington, under her present system of government, is the best situated city in the Republic to make an intelligent trial of municipal ownership, with a view of thoroughly testing the advantages and disadvantages of this much-discussed policy. In Washington, as I have pointed out, we are free of the very dangers which beset nearly all other cities, and which make a trial of municipal ownership with them wholly inexpedient. I merely offer the suggestion. Might it not be a wise thing to give serious thought to municipal control and operation of the gas and electric-light plants, the street railways, and the telephone service within this city?

To take them over at what it would actually cost to construct their physical properties—and of course nothing beyond this should be paid, for, as I understand it, no consideration has ever been paid the city or Government for their franchises—might and probably would enable the inhabitants of this city to have and enjoy cheaper and better lights, cheaper and better telephone service, and not only a very much cheaper street-railway service, but what is infinitely more desired and needed, a more convenient and efficient service.

I realize that the policy of municipal ownership, regardless of where or under what circumstances it may be undertaken, is not altogether free from objections, or, I might say, danger. To my mind one of the principal objections, if not dangers, following municipal ownership is the encouragement of the idea on the part of the people that they are to look to the Government for services and benefits which they should provide for themselves. I do not believe the Government should undertake any work that an individual could do or accomplish as well. The Government has its proper functions to perform, and should, in my opinon, be closely confined to the exercise of those functions.

I do not think it ever should obtrude itself into the affairs of the people when it can possibly be avoided. This may be rather an old-fashioned idea, but I can not forget that the Government has nothing to give, absolutely nothing, except that which it has already taken from the people. It is true that one of our great parties has persistently taught that it is the duty of the Government, by acts of legislation, to aid one class of our people in their business, even if it is at the expense of all other classes. Many intelligent and honest people believe that to be right, but I have never yet reached the point where I could appreciate the beauties of the doctrine of a protective tariff. It is true that under the operation of this system millions of dollars have been legislated out of the pockets of the great mass of the consuming public into the coffers of a favored few, and that great trusts and combinations have been brought into existence which now oppress the people and are driving many of them to the acceptance of policies socialistic in character in order to escape the ills they suffer, but I live in hope that an opportunity may be afforded at an early date to call a halt on this, to my mind, dangerous policy before we are thrust into the vortex of socialism itself in our efforts to find a remedy for the evil consequences of this vicious policy—a remedy which is no remedy at all, but simply a greater danger. To avoid this, I know, is the desire of every patriotic Republican as well as Democrat.

Another matter to which I now desire to ask your attention is a feature of the public school service which is provided in this bill, and in order that I may not be misunderstood I will state now that I am an advocate of and a firm believer in the public school system. I am a patron of the public schools, and am anxious to do all I can to promote their efficiency, and in this conection I will state that I share in the desire, which seems to be very general this session, that some measure will pass this body before it adjourns for the session which will provide an adequate compensation for the public school teachers. But this is not the matter to which I ask attention.

There are carried in this bill some items the wisdom of which I seriously doubt. Of course we all know that tuition in the public school in our home cities as well as here is absolutely free. Free tuition is what the term "public school" conveys to the minds of most of us. We go many steps beyond that in this city. Not only is tuition free here, but a beneficent Government furnishes free text-books, free pens and ink, free pencils and pads, and everything else of this character they use. More than this, as a part of the free school system here, we have a sewing school. I do not say that it is not a wise thing to conduct a sewing school as a part of the public school system, and it is not against this that I complain. Of course provision is made for a director or teacher for this sewing school, but at the same time a beneficent Government provides the thread and the needle and the cloth that is to be used by the pupils when they are engaged there in learning the art of sewing. More than this, as a part of the free school system here—and I do not say it is not the proper thing that it should constitute a part of it—we have a cooking school. Provision is made for a teacher, or director, for this cooking school, but at the same time the ever good Government provides the fruits and the vegetables, the meats, and condiments that the pupils attending this school experiment with in learning the art of cooking.

Furthermore, in this bill they now propose to take a further step. It is proposed to actually equip the playgrounds in connection with the public schools, to furnish the children the hot balls and the footballs and acting poles that they are to use in their games, leaving for the children to provide for themselves, or to have their parents furnish them, nothing, absolutely nothing, that the Government could furnish except food and raiment, and, I presume, that will follow in good time. Now, gentlemen, what I desire to invite your attention to is the all-important query, Where are the children, in so far as the public free school system is concerned, to learn the all-important lesson of self-reliance? Are we not, in this step which we are taking, and in some we have already taken, planting the seed in the minds of the youth of this country that is to germinate and grow, ultimately to blossom and finally to fructify into socialism full blown? Will not these classes of youths who are now being brought up by this system finally come to believe that they can look to the Government for anything and everything, and that they are to depend upon themselves for nothing?

Our forefathers were not brought up under this system, and no one can say that they have not made brighter the pages of history by reason of the fact that they were not so brought up. Their chief characteristic was self-reliance. They learned this lesson not only at home, but they learned it in the schools, which they frequently provided for themselves. They never knew the meaning of free text-books. In this day and generation if a musical instrument is needed for these schools they appeal to a beneficent government for it. In days gone by school entertainments were given—other means were adopted whereby the children and the teachers relied upon themselves to provide these things that they thought were necessary, and especially was this done if what was needed was required for their pleasure. Now that practice has been brought to an end. They look to the Government for everything that the Government will consent to furnish them. Now, I submit to you the query: If Washington is made the model city of the United States with reference to her public schools, as she should be, and also in all other matters—if other cities of our country, following the example here set, should adopt this policy of doing everything for the children and expect the children to do nothing for themselves, what effect will it ultimately have upon the character of the American people? Will those who come after us have the same spirit of self-reliance which characterized our ancestors, and which, in my opinion, was the one trait that enabled them to succeed where weaklings and dependents would surely have failed? [Loud applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask a question before the gentleman resumes his seat?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have had that matter of municipal government in my mind, and I would like to ask how long the system of governing those two cities in Texas by commissioners has been in vogue? How many years?

Mr. BURLESON. It has been in vogue in Galveston since the date of the disastrous storm, which I think was in September, 1900, and it has proven eminently satisfactory. And it was because of the success of the system as demonstrated in Galveston that it was finally adopted at Houston. The great success in the conduct of city affairs since the adoption of the system by Houston recently induced the city of Dallas to adopt the plan. The next legislature will be asked to so amend her charter as to provide for her government by a board of commissioners.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does your modern election law, putting a tax on the right to vote, help it out?

Mr. BURLESON. We have no tax upon the right to vote. We have a capitation tax, a law which requires every elector, in order to qualify himself to vote, to pay it at a fixed time, this tax to go toward the support of the free schools in our State.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And does it tend to carry out the idea of government by the commissioners and make it more economical and possibly more honest.

Mr. BURLESON. I think our election laws carefully safeguard the purity of the ballot, and I have no doubt that the constitutional amendment requiring the capitation tax has raised the standard of our suffragists, and of course this results in more honest elections, and honest elections conduce to honest and economical government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much is your poll tax?

Mr. BURLESON. One dollar and seventy-five cents, I think.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It is $2.75 in those cities, is it not?

Mr. BURLESON. Probably so; I am not certain that the city levies a poll tax.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 48. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making an appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster.

FRANKLIN MEMORIAL.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will substitute the name of Representative STAFFORD, of Wisconsin, as a member of the Franklin Memorial Committee on the part of the House, in lieu of the name of Representative STEVENS, of Minnesota, who declines the service.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] such time as he desires.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the only excuse that I have for making any talk at all in connection with this bill during the general debate is that perhaps what I may have to say will furnish a source of information on many subjects relative to the conduct of the local government which may be wanted by gentlemen, Members of this House, in their own neighborhoods. And whether I am right in the judgment I have formed will remain to be determined by those who may be seeking information on the question of local government.

This city is different from any other on the American continent, and therefore in some respects must be treated on a different basis.

Many people wonder why the Federal Government is called upon to pay one-half the expense incurred in the maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia. But when it is understood that the Federal Government owns more than one-half of the property within the District, and that this property is not subject to local taxation, and when it is further understood that the expense incident to the management of the city on account of its being the capital of the nation would be a burden which the local taxpayers could not well afford to bear, one can readily see why the burden of maintenance of the local government should be equally divided.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I wanted to ask the gentleman this question: You say that one-half of the property in the District——

Mr. MADDEN. One-half of the area.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman does not mean within the District, but within the city?

Mr. MADDEN. One-half within the city.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to ascertain from the gentleman where he gets those figures to the effect that one-half of the area is owned by the United States?

Mr. MADDEN. I get the figures from a very careful study of the District, or rather that part of the District within the city limits, and figuring out just what is embraced within the public parks and within the circles, streets, and the squares, and that occupied by public reservations, and all that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he includes in that the surface of the streets?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. You include in that the surface of the streets?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly, for the title to the streets is in the Federal Government.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman further if he thinks that is a benefit to the United States, to own the naked fee to the streets?

Mr. MADDEN. It should be, because while the streets are necessary for the travel of the people at large and for the people of the city particularly, they are at the disposal of the Government for the purpose of providing means of transportation, and thereby facilitating the transportation of the people, and at the same time yielding a revenue to the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. To whom is the ownership of the streets the greatest benefit—the Government or the residents of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MADDEN. The ownership of the streets, generally speaking, is beneficial to the people of the world. They are not given to the exclusive use of any people of any community, of any city, or of any country, and the citizen, no matter from whence he hails, is entitled to the same rights as the citizen residing upon the streets.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is not that so with reference to every city of the United States?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is it not true with reference to every city of the United States that the streets are dedicated to the public use and the inhabitants of the city more particularly?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; they are for the use of the people of the world—for the use of anybody who wants to use them.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is it not true that the streets of the city as they are improved along the private property, that that improvement and the expense of it is usually maintained, if not in whole, at least a large proportion, by the property owner?

Mr. MADDEN. In most cities of this country I think the practice is to levy special assessments on the abutting property for the first improvement of the streets.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is that so in this city?

Mr. MADDEN. No. The Government and the District together pay for the entire improvement.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And the private owner does not pay anything, does he?

Mr. MADDEN. The private owner pays nothing direct, but he pays his taxes into the general fund. Now, I think that is susceptible of an explanation, and unless explained it may be susceptible of a misconception. First, if a man owns a lot on a street not yet improved, on which he has paid taxes for twenty or twenty-five years into the general fund for the improvement of streets in other divisions of the city, a fair assumption is that when the time comes for the improvement of his property that he has paid infinitely more for the street improvement than he would have been compelled to pay if he were to get it by special assessment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understand the gentleman to say that private property pays no part of the improvement of the streets, and never did?

Mr. MADDEN. I say that now, but I have explained at the same time that while they pay no part of it direct, they do pay continuously into the general fund, from which fund the cost of all street improvements is paid.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The general taxes pay for running the city.

Mr. MADDEN. For running the city and improving the streets and for doing everything that pertains to the municipality.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Which is about 15 mills on the dollar, I understand.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; about that; less than that; 10 mills.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And it is the cheapest municipality of any city in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I think you are right.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And when the Government appropriates the money to macadamize or asphalt a street and put down the sidewalks or construct sewers, you do not think the private ownership ought to pay one dollar, do you, because they have previously paid a mill and a half on the dollar to run the police, schools, and ought to be exempt?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think you understand my position in this case. My position is that if you have paid for twenty years into a fund out of which the street is improved on which I own a lot, that you have paid enough money into that fund during the twenty years to have more than paid for the improvement which you get when it comes your turn to participate in the benefits secured from improvements in front of your property.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the case with Chicago and other cities.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is quite a different case in Chicago. In Chicago, unfortunately, the owner of the property is obliged, under the laws of Illinois, to pay the first cost of the first improvement and to pay the second cost of the second improvement and to pay the hundredth cost of the hundredth improvement, if that becomes necessary. The city itself, under the laws, pays no part of any improvement on any street within the city. It is not paid out of the general taxes, as it is here.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think they ought to remodel the tax system of Chicago?

Mr. MADDEN. We would like to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman stated that the Government of the United States owned more than one-half of the real estate of the District, including the streets and parks?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. What proportion of the value does the United States own? That would be a fair basis.

Mr. MADDEN. I would not undertake to say that, because that would be a question to be answered by some expert with larger experience as to the values here than I have.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I think the assessors make it that the Government owns a little more than half, at their valuation.

Mr. MADDEN. But I have the figures here showing the policy pursued in the assessment of property, the value, the area, and all that, which I think will be useful to Members.

Mr. SIMS. I regret to interrupt the gentleman, but I want to ask him a question.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not interrupt me.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman seems to be prepared to give information. I notice that Commissioner Macfarland refers to the fact that the streets are owned by the Government, as one of the reasons why the Government should pay half the burdens of the city. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that street areas are an untaxed asset everywhere—that they produce no revenue?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, certainly, but in most cases where streets are opened up at any time the title does not go to the municipality. The title still remains in the owner of the abutting property, so that in case the street should ever be closed, the property would revert back to the owner of the abutting property.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there is a difference of method in different cities. In some cities the municipality acquires an easement. In other cities it acquires the fee. That is the practice in the District of Columbia; but the practical result, when the municipality comes to pay for what it takes, whether it acquires an easement in the property for street purposes, or whether it acquires the fee of the property with the easement in the abutting property to use the acquired property of the streets, the municipality pays the same in either case.

Mr. MADDEN. In the long run, yes.

Mr. SIMS. Here is what I want to bring out, right in that connection: The argument, then, that the Government should share the burden of the city, based upon the fact of street and park ownership, has no real foundation in justice. What does the gentleman think of that?

Mr. MADDEN. My point is that, inasmuch as the Federal Government property is not taxable at all, and inasmuch as the city of Washington is the seat of government of the United States, and as the representatives of foreign governments live here and have their legations here, necessarily the character of improvements is much more expensive than they would be ordinarily where nothing was expected except to meet the needs of the people of the municipality itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But does not the owner of property in the District get an enhanced value to his property by reason of the location here of the Federal Government and the residences of the foreign ambassadors and the character of municipal government that must necessarily be maintained here?

Mr. MADDEN. I think quite likely that is true at the present time, but I was going to show just the difficulties they were obliged to overcome.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the gentleman goes to another branch of the discussion, he states that the Government of the United States owns the fee in the streets?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. As a matter of fact and as a matter of practice, does not the District of Columbia get the benefit of the franchise tax that is collected from the railroads for using those streets?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Now, the gentleman has figured into the area of the property that the Government owns—the public parks, upon which a vast amount of money is expended. Is it not true that the more beautiful the public parks are made the more they enhance the value of the private property surrounding them?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And is it not true, as a matter of fact, that no matter how beautiful the parks of a city are they are of not one dollar's benefit to the Government?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not agree to that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Except as a matter of sentiment.

Mr. MADDEN. The whole thing, then, must be a question of sentiment. Early in the history of the world the people of Athens controlled the greatest commercial city in the world, but when they became rich and powerful they began to conceive the idea that beauty was the thing that was needed to attract the people of the world, who were in search of pleasure and beauty. Commercialism is not the only attractive thing, and here in the nation's capital it should be secondary to beauty.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And as the great poet says, "Where wealth accumulates, men decay."

Mr. MADDEN. I haven't reached that state of progress yet which enables me to understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is it not true that the real estate owners are anxious that the Government should purchase outlying property and build up parks in order to enhance the value of their property, and as soon as that is done they cry that the Government has withdrawn so much taxable property from the city that they ought to continue to pay one-half of the expenses?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; there is a constant and systematic effort to induce the Government to buy properties. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And then they raise the cry that the Government owns so much property that they ought to pay one-half of the expenses.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that there is controversy between two contending forces that have a desire to establish a permanent aristocracy in certain sections of the city to which unfortunate individuals like us are not to be admitted.

Mr. SIMS. I want to bid the gentleman good-by with one more question.

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. The complaint seems to be that because the Government owns the streets that it thereby deprives the city of an asset out of which it could realize something.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I do not agree to that.

Mr. SIMS. And I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that we ought to help maintain the large streets, but whenever it is stated that the Government owns one-half of the property and that the ownership in the streets is a taxable asset, I can not agree to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I want to get at is this: When Washington secured the land now embraced within the District for the location of a site for the nation's capital, one-half of the entire area was given by the then owners without compensation.

It was with great difficulty that the public improvements needed to accommodate the business of the Federal Government were made.

Lack of funds compelled the Government to borrow from the States of Maryland and Virginia on the credit of the Commissioners of the District $200,000, and land was sold to raise an additional sum with which to meet the obligations incurred for that purpose.

During the early history of the District the Federal Government bore no part of the expense of the maintenance of the local government or of the improvements, except to add to its buildings from time to time and make such improvements as were absolutely necessary in and around its reservations.

The improvement of the streets and the maintenance of the municipal service was charged to the cities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria, and to the county.

In 1846 Alexandria withdrew and induced Virginia to take back what it had given, thus forcing those who remained to bear the whole charge of maintenance.

The Federal Government at that time was poor, and it was not certain that the capital was going to remain here. Efforts were constantly being made to get it moved, and it was not until 1865 that talk of removing the capital was suspended.

In 1835 there was a report made to the Senate by one of its committees calling attention to the neglect of the national capital by the Federal Government, and recommending that it should pay one-half of the expense incurred in its maintenance.

No action was taken on the report, or at least no results followed.

It was not until 1871 that Congress authorized a board of public works and a Territorial form of government for the improvement of streets and avenues.

That was done at the expense of the people who lived here, although Congress assumed one-half of the bonded debt and later guaranteed the bonds.

The vast cost of the development and improvement of the streets and avenues impressed Congress, and for the first time showed what a gigantic task it was, and those in power agreed that it would not be just to continue to force the local citizens to create a city, such as the nation's capital ought to be, unaided.

In 1878 the law under which the present system of maintenance was enacted, and since then one-half of the expense incurred for all public improvements has been paid by the Federal Government and the other one-half by the people of the District.

The city is now conducted by a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the President.

Their jurisdiction extends over the entire 70 square miles of territory. Their functions in many respects are those of mayors, commissioners of public works, heads of departments, members of city councils, county commissioners, and governors of States.

The District contains a population of about 325,000, 64,000 of whom live outside the city of Washington in fifteen or twenty towns and villages.

In taking into account the expense of maintaining the District, it would not be fair to compare it with any other city, for here is located the seat of government of the country, calling for many extraordinary expenses not usually required in an ordinary city.

The maintenance of the militia is required under the organic law of the District, which is a function usually performed by the State in other Commonwealths.

The care of the indigent sick and poor is a burden imposed upon counties in other sections of the country.

The care of the insane and the expense incident thereto, while chargeable against the District, is a State function elsewhere, while the local improvements here are upon a much broader scale than those usually made by other municipalities, so that in making comparisons of the expense incurred for the maintenance of the District government it must be borne in mind that we are appropriating not only for the city, but for the county and the State as well.

A general résumé of the methods of taxation in the District is contained in the addenda to the report of the assessors of the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1902, marked "Exhibit A," et seq.

No property except that of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the property owned by foreign governments for legation purposes is exempt from assessments for improvements.

The method of levying assessments for water mains and sewers will be found in Public Document No. 140, marked "Exhibit B."

An act of Congress approved April 28, 1904, describes the method of imposing and collecting personal taxes of various kinds and is more fully described in public document No. 247, marked "Exhibit C." Public Document No. 88 describes the method of levying taxes for the opening of minor streets and alleys, and is marked "Exhibit D."

The act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, provides that real property in the District of Columbia shall be assessed at not less than two-thirds of the true value.

One and one-half per cent per annum on both personal and real property is the basis upon which the tax is levied.

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1905, and ending June 30, 1906, the total assessed valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation was $239,461,985, divided as follows:

City	$189,728,863
County	49,733,122

The tax of 1½ per cent on this basis is for the city $2,845,932.95, and for the county $745,996.83, or a total of $3,591,929.78.

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1904, and ending June 30, 1905, the total assessed valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation was $217,608,296, that for the city being $176,864,785 and for the county $40,743,511, and the tax, based on 1½ per cent per annum, on that valuation for the city amounted to $2,652,971.78 and for the county $611,152.66, or a total of $3,264,124.44.

To secure the total valuation of real property in the District of Columbia, that exempt from taxation should be added to the above figures.

These valuations are to be found in Senate Document No. 181, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, marked "Exhibit E," being "Schedule of nontaxable real estate in the District of Columbia compiled from the records of the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia."

The total assessed valuation of the personal property for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1905, and ending June 30, 1906, is $26,575,819.66, the personal tax amounting for the year in question to $666,247.20.

It will be observed that this is more than 1½ per cent of the basis of the assessed valuation, the reason being that while tangible personal property is assessed at 1½ per cent, the receipts of various kinds of corporations are assessed at other rates.

Special assessments are levied for the purpose of reimbursing the municipality for all or a part of the moneys expended for municipal improvements—i. e., paving alleys, laying sidewalks, setting curb, laying water mains, constructing sewers, making connections with sewers and water mains, etc., as shown in Exhibit A.

During the year 1905 assessments were levied for special improvements for the amount of $181,044.70. The amount levied for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, can not be ascertained.

The cost of cleaning paved streets by hand averages $4.15 per mile.

The cost of cleaning paved streets by machine averages $3.75 per mile.

This cost is based on the average width of the street as 38 feet between the curb lines.

The amount expended for cleaning streets by hand for the fiscal year 1905 was $80,108.24, for machine cleaning $54,361.18.

The paved streets are cleaned by hand daily, and on an average of three times a week by machine.

The unpaved streets are cleaned about once in ten days.

The area of paved streets cleaned by hand per day is equivalent to 76.2 miles, and the area cleaned by machine averages 583 miles per day in winter and 71.8 per day in summer.

The unpaved streets are cleaned by contract, the amount expended for that purpose being $64 per day, the total cost for the fiscal year 1905 being $15,892.99.

The city maintains a police force of 1 major and superintendent, $4,000; 1 captain and assistant superintendent, $1,800; 4 captains, each, $1,500; 11 lieutenants, each, $1,320; 40 sergeants, each, $1,140; 265 privates of class 2, each, $1,080; 370 privates of class 1, each, $900.

The work of the department in detail, the area covered, and the population served is best described in the report of the superintendent, marked "Exhibit F."

The District of Columbia has a total indebtedness of $14,291,280.14, and consists of $11,408,000 District of Columbia 3.65 per cent registered bonds and $643,350 of District of Columbia 3.65 per cent coupon bonds. The unfunded debt is $2,240,030, being for advances made by the United States pursuant to law from appropriations chargeable to the revenues of the District of Columbia in excess of the revenues thereof to June 30, 1905.

The funded debt of the District was incurred under prior forms of government and matures in 1924.

The unfunded debt arose from extraordinary expenditures for projects of public improvements authorized by appropriations made by Congress, such as the sewage-disposal system, the filtration plant, site and construction of the municipal building, elimination of grade crossings in connection with the construction of the new Union Station, the Connecticut Avenue Bridge across Rock Creek, the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River and approaches, the bridge across Anacostia River, the Sixteenth Street Bridge across Piney Branch, and the purchase of site for a municipal hospital.

The total appropriations which have been made on account of the permanent public improvements above indicated aggregate $14,396,925, to meet which temporary advances from the Treasury of the United States have been made to the District of Columbia to enable it to meet the amount it was required to pay in excess of the ordinary revenues of the District, upon which the District pays the Federal Government interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

It is provided in the act approved March 3, 1905, and other acts that the unfunded debt of the District must be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia within five years, beginning July 1, 1906.

The city has 419 miles of paved streets; 136.06 miles being sheet asphalt, 24.75 asphalt block, 0.92 vitrified block, 25.99 granite, 9.68 cobblestone, and 121.58 macadam.

Experience has shown that sheet asphalt requires no considerable repairs until after the tenth year of its life and that the ordinary life of such pavements is about eighteen years, although much of this class of pavement lasts thirty years before resurfacing is necessary.

Much necessarily depends upon the traffic, and very heavily traveled pavements and a pavement that receives practically no travel at all go to pieces quite rapidly.

Asphalt block has a life of practically fifteen years without repairs, and many of the streets of the city paved with asphalt blocks were paved twenty years ago and are still in good condition.

Granite block has the longest life and requires little or no repairs, if subject only to the average use, but is not desirable for anything but heavily traveled streets.

Macadam streets are principally used outside the city limits, and require more constant attention and more extensive repairs, but they meet every purpose required in the outlying sections of the city.

The cost for laying asphalt pavements in the city during the past year was $1.46 per square yard. During the year 1905 it was $1.57 per square yard. This includes the construction of a 6-inch concrete base, 1½ inches binder course, and 1½ inches top course after compression.

The cost per linear foot for curb, which is of granite, averages about $1.05.

The city requires a guaranty of five years from the contractor who puts down asphalt pavements; that is to say, he is required to keep it in repair during that time.

At present there are 2,200,000 square yards of asphalt pavement not under guaranty; the guarantee period having expired.

The amount for patching asphalt pavements averages about $60,000 per annum and costs, when the whole area is taken into consideration, about 7.2 cents per square yard.

The amount spent in resurfacing sheet asphalt pavements is about $100,000 per year, giving a resurfaced area of about 60,000 square yards.

If this cost is spread over the total area not under guaranty, it gives an average cost of square yard on the total yardage of about 4.5 cents per square yard.

The total cost of repairs (patching and resurfacing) distributed over the entire yardage of sheet asphalt pavements will therefore average 7.2 cents per square yard.

The total revenues collected from the saloons within the District is $459,032.90. The charge being $800 per annum for barrooms and $300 per annum for wholesale liquor license.

The aggregate amount received from insurance license is $81,021.77, and from licenses of all other kinds $107,629.83, making a total of $188,651.60.

The city pays for street lighting $295,400 per annum. The price heretofore paid for flat-flame burners for street lighting was $20 per lamp. Fifteen dollars is considered a high price for this service, and the committee reduced the compensation to that figure.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What are the prices in other cities of similar size to that of the city of Washington?

Mr. MADDEN. Why, the ordinary price is about one-half of the price they sell the gas to the private consumer for. Here the open-flame burner, which is mentioned in this statement of mine, burns 5 feet of gas per hour. They burn on an average 4,000 hours per annum. Four thousand multiplied by five gives us 20,000 feet of gas. That means a dollar per thousand to the city, whereas it ought not to be more than half that, but the committee has recommended a reduction from $20 to $15 as a starter for a reform.

There are 6,507 of these lamps, which, at $5 each, makes a saving to the people of the District of $32,535.

There are 952 Welsbach lamps, for which the city was paying $25 per light, and the committee believed that $20 was all that should be paid for that kind of service, and therefore has reduced the figures.

There are 989 arc lights, for which the city was paying $85 per lamp, and that has been reduced to $80, thus making a saving on the street lighting in the aggregate of $42,240.

The strange thing to me is that where the Welsbach light is furnished an outside company has bid on the lighting. This company has no gas, but is obliged to buy it from the company which owns the gas plant, whereas I am of the opinion that the company which is granted the privilege of manufacturing and furnishing gas to the municipality ought to be obliged to furnish gas direct to the municipality in any form which it may be required, and at reasonable prices.

The flat-flame burners, which consume 5 feet of gas per hour, are used on an average four thousand hours per annum. This would make 20,000 feet of gas burned in each lamp per annum, thus indicating that the gas company charges the District $1 per thousand.

Now, $1 per 1,000 feet of gas to the municipality is an outrageous price. One bill only is needed to be made out to the municipality once a month, whereas to receive the same amount of revenue from the private consumer the gas company would be obliged to make out 40,000. The cost of the printing of the bills would amount to something, and the clerical force required to make them out and keep the records would amount to something more; but aside from all that, the Government that breathes the breath of life into the corporation, that gives it the power to manufacture and furnish the commodity, that enables its stockholders to grow rich from the profits which it earns, ought, it would seem to me, to indicate to some one the necessity of requiring some concession from the gas company to the municipality from which the gas company secures its privileges.

My own judgment is that not more than half of this price should be charged for the street lighting, although the price fixed by the committee amounts to 75 cents.

The new methods of manufacturing gas admit of its production for a much less price than was possible when the gas company was first organized, and the price paid now by private consumers should be reduced, in my judgment, to at least 85 cents.

One of the strange things hard to understand is that up to the present time no attempt has been made to compel the street-railway companies of the District to sprinkle that part of the street occupied by their tracks.

The inconvenience caused to the public on account of the dust made by the operation of the cars would seem to call for some radical change in the method of operating, and your committee has recommended that all the street-car companies be obliged in the future to operate sprinkling cars to relieve the unpleasant conditions heretofore existing.

Ah, but I have heard some gentlemen say that this is an onerous burden placed upon the street-car companies, that are already overtaxed, that they pay 4 per cent on their gross receipts into the coffers of the treasury of the District, and I want to say in reply to that this: That the street-car companies pay the 4 per cent I am willing to admit, and that thus far it has reached to about $72,000 per annum, including the tax on their real estate. They are capitalized for $12,000,000. They pay dividends of 6 per cent on this twelve millions of capitalization. This 6 per cent amounts to $720,000 a year. The value of the franchise which yields this enormous profit is the right to use the streets owned by the Government. If the personal property of the street-railway company were taxed on the same basis as the personal property of the individual whose furniture is taxed—at 1½ per cent on the par value of the $12,000,000—this company would be paying at least $180,000 a year instead of $72,000 a year.

Congress has appropriated $325,000 for the construction of a bridge over the Potomac River. This bridge is to be used by the Anacostia Street Railway Company, and because of that it was required to be built 18 feet wider than would otherwise be necessary.

I figure out, in my own unsophisticated way, that the street-car company occupies 20 per cent of this bridge, and that the bridge was built infinitely heavier because of the necessity for its use by the street-car company than it would have to be built otherwise, but no recommendation, mark you, was made by the Commissioners to the Committee on Appropriations for the collection of any part of the cost of the construction of this bridge from the street-railway company, and it was only because of the indefatigable efforts to dig up information that the committee was able to ascertain at all that some portion of the cost of this bridge should be paid by the street-railway company.

After a careful examination of the president of the railway company he admitted that his company should pay a portion of the expense. His suggestion was that $12,000 would be the fair proportion of the street railway company, but it requires no great stretch of imagination to understand that this would be neither just to the taxpayers of the District nor to the people at large and your committee thought that $32,500, or 10 per cent of the cost, would be the just proportion of the railroad company toward the cost of the construction of this bridge.

This recommendation is, of course, subject to a point of order, but I hope that no Member of the House will allow his personal feelings about which committee should take jurisdiction over the question to impel him to make a point of order, because there can be no doubt that the recommendation is made in the interest of the people of the country and of the people of the District.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, most assuredly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it true that the Committee on Appropriations has discovered that there is no way of legislating for the District of Columbia except in appropriation bills?

Mr. MADDEN. No; the gentleman did not understand me, I presume.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think I understood the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I said there was no way in which the information which impelled the recommendation made in this bill for the collection of $32,500 could have been discovered except by the investigation made on account of the necessity of appropriations; that such information could not have come to any other committee, because the other committees would not have been called upon to investigate the need for the expenditure. I have no reflection whatever to make upon the rights or ability of other committees to do the things that are assigned to them to do, and I only give this as an explanation of why we make the recommendation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Illinois contend that the committee to which bills are properly referred that have for their object the enactment of laws for the government of the District of Columbia could not have sent for the same persons and have secured the same information that the Committee on Appropriations has secured?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; but there would be no incentive for any committee to send for these persons.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is mere speculation.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is not mere speculation. It is a fact incontrovertible, and I will show the gentleman that it is a fact, and that he can not successfully deny it.

The District Commissioners come before the Committee on Appropriations. They indicate a wish for the expenditure of a given sum of money. The committee immediately undertakes to inquire why the demand is made, and they begin to investigate for themselves why this money is needed, and they compel the Commissioners and all who have information to disgorge the information for their use, and finally because of the desire and the necessity for the money in all these instances many things that should be done by the Commissioners of the District are uncovered which would never otherwise be uncovered.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Can I ask you a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Now that the Appropriations Committee has uncovered and found out what you state, is it not proper that a bill should be introduced and referred to the proper legislative committee, so that this matter may be enacted into legislation?

Mr. MADDEN. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no interest except the accomplishment of the result, which ought to be done, and whether it is accomplished through one channel or another makes no difference to me whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that this bridge was authorized, if I recollect correctly, in 1903, and there has never been a suggestion from anybody until now——

Mr. MADDEN. That is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). From any committee or any person that part of the cost of this bridge should be borne by anybody except the District and the Federal Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; this is the first time.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I was going to say, now you have discovered this information, is it not probable the Commissioners of the District would suggest some legislation to cover the situation which you mention?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say, in reply to the question of the gentleman, that the Commissioners of the District would not give up information or suggest that it was necessary for anybody to pay any part of these expenses, and you could not extract it from them with a corkscrew; neither have they ever made any suggestion about any economy in any line during all the weeks that we had them before us. You ask them where they can economize and they always say they are short of help; that they need more places. Why, I was importuned by a man to vote to create a place which he said was promised him long in advance of the submission of the estimates by the Commissioners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think, in justice to the Commissioners, the gentleman should state that it was not with their knowledge.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, they said it was not farmed out, but they did not need it, that was evident.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman state here that the Commissioners asked for this place knowing that it was wholly unnecessary?

Mr. MADDEN. We discovered that it was wholly unnecessary. I do not know what they thought.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, I assume that the Commissioners held to a contrary opinion or they would not have asked for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, if you can find in any line of the 965 pages of testimony taken before the District Appropriation Committee where any Commissioner by word, deed, or thought suggested a line of economy anywhere in the District government, I would like to have you point it out.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Just a moment. When they asked you for the money to pay these people, did they not tell you what the places were which they sought to have created?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir; and what they wanted them to do; but they were not able to satisfy us in a great many cases that they needed them, and in a great many cases where they did not ask them they have not been able to satisfy us that they ought to have them. Now there is another question about the Anacostia Bridge, which seems to be creating considerable interest.

The investigation showed that the building of the approaches to this bridge, to avoid a grade crossing over the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company's tracks would necessitate condemnation proceedings in order to secure additional property; that the approach had to be made much longer than originally contemplated; that no provision had been made by the Commissioners that any part of this additional expense be borne by the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company.

Now, I understand, though I do not know for certain, that when the act for the elimination of grade crossings was passed, that it was understood that the tracks owned by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company were to be taken up, but since then a steel company has organized a plant to which these tracks run, and it is thought that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company wishes to maintain the tracks where they are.

Investigation shows that this additional cost will amount to $54,000, and a provision is therefore included in the bill to compel the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to pay such additional cost and to oblige it to maintain the viaduct over its tracks in the future.

The tracks at grade created a dangerous crossing. It compelled the increase in the cost of constructing the approach to the bridge. The approach was necessarily built higher than it otherwise would have been, very much longer than it would have to be, and a bridge must be built over the tracks. We have to condemn property to do this, and this cost, all told, is $54,000 more than it would be if the Baltimore and Ohio tracks were not there. And so the committee recommends a provision by which the municipality can collect this $54,000 from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and that, too, is subject to a point of order.

That everything should be done to make Washington the most beautiful city in the Union all will agree, but while doing this every precaution should be taken against unnecessary extravagance.

The people of the nation are justly proud of their capital city. Their Representatives are impressed with the importance of maintaining it as a model city and improving it in every way possible.

Nothing should be left undone to make it the most beautiful city in the world, but due regard should always be had for conservatism in the expenditure of the people's money.

No sinecure should be created; no man should be employed who does not render a dollar's worth of work for a dollar of compensation.

The Commissioners of the District are men of unquestioned integrity, but I am firmly of the opinion that at least one Commissioner of the three should be selected to represent the interests of the nation at large, so that he may be independent of local influence and free to express an opinion representative of the economies which it is believed can be recommended in many respects in the government of the District.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is not one of the three Commissioners selected along the lines you suggest?

Mr. MADDEN. No, sir; he is selected to represent the Army.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. We have no Army here.

Mr. MADDEN. I want a man selected to represent the common, everyday people of the country, one who will represent the 50 per cent of taxation paid by you and me, and all the rest of the people. [Applause.]

The exhibits referred to are as follows:

EXHIBIT A.

OFFICE OF THE ASSESSOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
November 17, 1902.

METHODS OF TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ASSESSMENT OFFICIALS.

Assessments of both real and personal property are made by the assessor and a board of five (act of July 1, 1902, and 28 Stat., 282) assistant assessors, three of said board being designated by the assessor to act as the assessors of real estate and as the excise board and the two other members of said board designated by the assessor to compose the board of personal tax appraisers. All five members of said board of assistant assessors, together with the assessor, chairman, constitute the board of equalization and review of real estate assessments and also the board of personal tax appeals. The assessor, however, acts as chairman ex officio of the several boards aforesaid. The assessor and the members of the board of assistant assessors may not be removed except for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. The members of the board of assistant assessors are required to perform such other official duties as the assessor may from time to time direct. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

The salary of the assessor is $3,500 per annum, and that of each of the members of the board of assistant assessors $3,000 per annum (28 Stat., 282, and act of July 1, 1902). The assessor is required to furnish bond in the sum of $10,000 (30 Stat., 666), and each member of the board must, before entering upon his duties, take an oath to diligently, faithfully, and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him. (28 Stat., 282.)

ASSSESMENT OF REAL PROPERTY.

Real estate is assessed triennially (28 Stat., 282) at not less than two-thirds of its true value (act of July 1, 1902) by the board of three assistant assessors (28 Stat., 282). This assessment must be completed on or before the first Monday of January in each third year and return of the same made to the assessor, together with all maps, field books, surveys, plats, and all notes and memoranda concerning said assessment. The assessment must be made by said assessors from actual view and from the best sources of information obtainable.

The assessment then passes to the board of equalization and review, composed of the assessor, chairman, and five (act of July 1, 1902, and 28 Stat., 282) assistant assessors. This board convenes on the first Monday of January (28 Stat., 282), and continues in session until review of the assessment is completed, which must be, as nearly as practicable, by the first Monday of June in each third year. Public notice of the time and place of such meeting must be given by publication for two successive days in two daily newspapers in the District of Columbia. The members of the said board are authorized to administer oaths or affirmations, to summon, through the officers of the Metropolitan police force, any person to appear before said board to testify touching matters pertaining to the assessment, such witnesses being allowed the same fees as paid in civil actions before the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Any person summoned and examined, as aforesaid, and knowingly making false oath or affirmation, is considered guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof may be punished according to laws for punishment of perjury (28 Stat., 285).

Any three members of said board shall constitute a quorum for business, and in the absence of the assessor a temporary chairman may be selected. It is the duty of the board of equalization and review to hear appeals from property owners and to fairly and impartially equalize, as a basis for taxation, the values placed upon real property by the board of assistant assessors. In reaching their determination they may raise the valuations of such tracts or lots as, in their opinion, may have been returned below their value and reduce the valuations of such as they may believe to have been returned above their value to such sums as, in their opinion, may be the value thereof. Upon completion of the duties of the board of equalization and review the assessment must be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, after which approval it becomes the basis of taxation for the ensuing three years (28 Stat., 284).

Annually, on or about the 1st of July, the board of assistant assessors is required to make a list of all real property which shall have become subject to taxation, and which is not then on the tax list, and to fix the valuation thereof according to the rules prescribed for assessing real estate. They are also required to make a return of all new structures erected or roofed, and additions to, or improvements of, old structures of over $500 in value, which shall not have been theretofore assessed, specifying the tract or lot on which each of such structures shall have been erected and the value of such structure, and they shall add such valuation to the assessment made of such tract or lot. When improvements on any tract or lot become damaged or destroyed, the board is required to reduce the assessment on such property to the extent of such damage.

Appeals from these yearly assessments are heard by the board of equalization and review between the first and third Mondays of July of each year.

If the board of assistant assessors shall ascertain that any real property has been omitted from assessment for any previous year or years, or has been so assessed that the assessment was void, they must at once reassess such property for each year of such omission and report the same, through the assessor, to the collector of taxes, who is required to at once proceed to collect the taxes so in arrears as other taxes are collected. However, no property which has escaped taxation is liable for a period of more than three years prior to assessment, except in the case of property involved in litigation.

Whenever a subdivision of any real property is made and recorded with the surveyor of the District the board of assistant assessors must reassess the property so subdivided, and the tax on such reassessment is due and payable at the semiannual payment of taxes next ensuing. (28 Stat., 284 and 285.)

RATE OF TAXATION.

The rate of taxation is uniformly, throughout the District of Columbia, 1½ per cent. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

BOOKS OF ASSESSMENT.

The books of assessment are prepared by the assessor before the 1st day of November in each year, and upon completion thereof the assessor is required to make a statement showing the total amount of the assessment of both real and personal property and the total amount of taxes to be collected under said assessments; which statement must be receipted by the collector of taxes, in triplicate, and said collector is held responsible, under his bond, for all such taxes, except such as he may not be able to collect after fully complying with the requirements of law. The original receipt of said assessment and taxes must be forwarded by the assessor to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, the duplicate to the auditor of the District of Columbia, and the triplicate is to be retained by the collector. (27 Stat., 13.)

All real property must be assessed in the name of the owner or trustee or trustees of the owner thereof. All undivided real property of a deceased person may be assessed in the name of such deceased person until the same is divided according to law, or otherwise passed into the possession of some other person or persons, and all real property the ownership of which is unknown shall be assessed "Owner unknown." (28 Stat., 282.)

TAX BILLS.

All general tax bills must be prepared under the direction of the assessor. (27 Stat., 13.) By order of the Commissioners, all special assessment and water-main tax bills are also prepared under his supervision.

DATE OF PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Taxes on realty are levied by fiscal years, and are payable one-half in November, at the option of the owner, no penalty accruing for failure to pay said half until the whole tax becomes due in the following May. For failure to pay before the 1st of June, 1 per cent per month penalty is charged. (Act of February 14, 1902.)

PUBLIC INSPECTION OF RECORDS.

The assessor is required to have the records of his office open to the inspection of the public, free of charge, at such time or times as the public interest will permit. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

EXEMPTIONS.

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, made the following provisions as to exemptions from taxation:

"That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran art building, free public library buildings, churches, the Soldiers' Home, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity conducted without charge to inmates, profit, or income; cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit; but if any portion of any such building, house, grounds, or cemeteries so in terms excepted is larger than is absolutely required and actually used for its legitimate purpose and none other, or is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds." (19 Stat., 399.)

This has been modified by the act of July 1, 1902, which provides:

"That hereafter property used for educational purposes, that is not used for private gain, shall be exempt from taxation, and all other property used for educational purposes shall be assessed and taxed as other property is assessed and taxed."

And also:

"And hereafter no property except that of the United States or the District of Columbia shall be exempt from assessments for improvements."

SALES FOR DELINQUENT TAXES.

The assessor is required to annually prepare a list of taxes on real property in arrears on the 1st day of July. The Commissioners must fix a date of sale and publish the list with notice of sale in a pamphlet, of which not less than 2,000 copies must be printed for distribution to taxpayers applying therefor. The Commissioners must also give notice, by advertisement twice a week for three successive weeks, beginning on the third Monday of February of each year, in three daily newspapers published in the District, that the pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be given to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of the collector of taxes. In said pamphlet a description of property sufficient to identify the same is considered a proper description. The expenses of advertising and printing of pamphlet are paid by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised.

If the taxes due, together with penalties and costs, shall not have been paid prior to date of sale, the property must be sold by the collector of taxes, under the direction of the Commissioners, at public auction, in the collector's office, said sale commencing at least three weeks after first publication of said notice, and continuing each day (Sundays and holidays excepted) until all said delinquent property is sold.

The collector must require from every purchaser a deposit sufficient, in his judgment, to guarantee a full and final settlement for such purchase. Every purchaser other than the District of Columbia shall pay the full amount of his bid, including surplus, if any, to the collector within five days after last day of sale, and if such payment is not made within time specified deposit of person so failing to pay shall be forfeited to the District of Columbia and collector shall issue certificate of sale for such property to the next highest bidder; and if the latter shall not pay the amount of his bid within two days thereafter, the sales upon which the bids were made shall be set aside by the Commissioners and the property shall be considered as having been bid in in the name of the District of Columbia.

In case no other person bids, or bids are insufficient to cover amount of taxes due, together with penalties and costs, the collector shall bid the amount due, together with penalties and costs, and purchase it for the District; but property so bid in for the District of Columbia is not thereafter exempt from taxation. Failure on the part of the District to enforce the liens thus acquired does not release property from any tax that may be due the District.

Immediately after close of sale, upon payment of purchase money, the collector must issue to all purchasers certificates of sale, and if the property is not redeemed from said sale within two years from last day thereof, by payment to the collector, for the use of the holder of the certificate, the amount for which property was sold, exclusive of surplus, and 12 per cent per annum thereon, a deed must be given by the Commissioners to the holder of the certificate, which deed is admitted to be prima facie evidence of a fee-simple title. No deed, however, can be issued until all taxes and assessments due on the property are paid, including taxes for which the District purchased property at tax sale. Nor must said deeds be executed if it shall be discovered that sales were for any cause invalid and ineffectual to pass title to property sold, in which case the Commissioners must cancel the sale and refund the purchase money with 6 per cent per annum interest, together with the surplus, if any.

If any conveyance made by the Commissioners of property sold for taxes shall be set aside by the court, the party in whose favor the decree is rendered must pay to the party holding the conveyance the amount paid for such taxes and conveyances, with interest at 6 per cent per annum. When any tax sale is for any reason set aside or canceled, the property embraced in said sale may be readvertised and sold at the tax sale next ensuing.

Minors and other persons under legal disability are allowed one year after attaining age or after removal of such disability to redeem property sold or bid off by the collector of taxes, by payment of the amount of purchase money, with 8 per cent per annum interest, together with all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser between the date of sale and date of redemption, with 8 per cent per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments.

Property sold as aforesaid is redeemable from said sale at any time within two years after last day of sale by payment to the collector of taxes, for the use of the holder of the certificate, the sum mentioned therein, exclusive of surplus, with interest thereon at 12 per cent per annum after date of such certificate. Any surplus remaining after collection of tax, penalty, etc., must be deposited by the collector to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to owner or owners of property in the same manner as other payments made by the District, but if any property sold as aforesaid is redeemed from sale within the time allowed, the surplus collected at time of sale must be paid to holder of certificate.

The collector is required, within twenty days (exclusive of Sundays and holidays) after last day of sale, to file with the recorder of deeds a written report stating property sold other than that sold to the District of Columbia, to whom it was assessed, taxes due, to whom sold, amount paid, date of sale, cost of sale, and surplus, if any.

If property bid in for the District of Columbia shall not have been redeemed within two years from last day of sale, by payment of taxes, penalties, and costs due at time of sale, and 8 per cent per annum thereon, the Commissioners may sell said property at public or private sale, and issue to the purchaser a deed, which shall have the same force and effect as the deed provided for property sold at regular annual sale.

The collector of taxes may, at any time before expiration of time allowed for redemption of property bid in for District of Columbia, issue certificates of taxes to any person applying therefor, and if property is not redeemed within two years from date of said certificate, by payment of the face of the certificate, exclusive of surplus and 12 per cent per annum thereon, the Commissioners shall issue a deed to the holder of the certificate, which deed shall have the same force and effect as deeds given for property sold at regular annual tax sale. Deeds, however, shall not be issued, either in case of property bid in for the District which has not been redeemed within two years or property bid in for the District upon which certificates of sale are issued within redemption period, unless all taxes and assessments due on the property are paid, nor if the sale to the District was for any cause invalid or ineffectual to give title to the property. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

The assessor is required to prepare and keep in his office, for public inspection, a list of all real estate sold for nonpayment of general or special taxes or assessments, said list to show the date of sale, for what taxes sold, in whose name assessed at time of sale, amount of sale, when and to whom conveyed, if heeded, or if redeemed from sale, the date of redemption. (27 Stat., 37.)

COLLECTION AND DEPOSIT OF REVENUES.

It is the duty of the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia to collect all revenues of the District and deposit the amount collected daily with the Treasurer of the United States, and he is held responsible under his bond for all taxes except such as he may not be able to collect after fully complying with the requirements of law. (20 Stat., 461; 27 Stat., 13.)

Section 2 of the District appropriation law of March 3, 1883, prescribes—

"That hereafter all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, together with all revenues of the District of Columbia, from taxes or otherwise, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, as required by the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1878." (22 Stat., 470.)

CERTIFIED STATEMENTS OF TAXES.

The assessor is required to furnish certified statements, over his hand and official seal, of all taxes and assessments, general and special, that may be due and unpaid at the time of making said certificates. For each certificate a fee of 50 cents must be paid to the collector of taxes.

When such certificate is issued, it is a bar to the collection from any subsequent purchaser of any tax or assessment omitted from, and which may be a lien upon the real estate mentioned in, said certificate; but such omission does not affect the liability of the person who owned the property at the time such tax was assessed. (27 Stat., 37.)

TEMPORARY REDUCTION OF INTEREST ON ARREARS OF TAXES.

If arrears of taxes for years prior to 1900 are paid before December 31, 1902, 6 per cent per annum interest is charged instead of usual penalties and interest. (Act of February 15, 1902.)

REASSESSMENTS.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed, in cases where general taxes or assessments for local improvements are quashed, set aside, or declared void by the supreme court of the District of Columbia by reason of imperfect or erroneous description of the property against which same was levied, by reason of such tax or assessment not having been authenticated by proper officer, by reason of a defective return of service of notice, or for any technical reason other than the right of the public authorities to levy the tax or assessment, to reassess the property in question, with power to collect such reassessment. Said reassessment, however, must be made within ninety days after judgment or decree of court quashing or setting aside such taxes or assessments. Any amount theretofore paid on the assessment which has been declared void shall be credited upon the reassessment. (29 Stat., 98, and 30 Stat., 721.)

DESIGNATIONS OF PARCELS OF LAND.

Act of March 3, 1899, prescribed a system for numbering each lot, part of lot, or parcel of land in the District of Columbia. The object of this act was to procure uniformity in this respect and to prevent duplications in numbers.

TRANSCRIPTS OF DEEDS, WILLS, ETC.

Act of March 3, 1899, section 3, is as follows:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be made a daily transcript and entry on the records of said assessor of the designations of lots or parcels of land in said District appearing in instruments of conveyance received for record in the office of the recorder of deeds and the designations of lots or parcels of land in said District transferred by probated wills; and the person or persons whom the Commissioners of said District may designate for the purpose of making such transcripts shall for this purpose at all times, during office hours, have full access to the records of the recorder of deeds and the register of wills of said District." * * *

Special assessments.

ASSESSMENT AND PERMIT WORK.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized (28 Stat., 247 and 248), whenever in their judgment the same is necessary for the public health, safety, or comfort, or when application is made therefor, accompanied by a deposit equal to one-half the estimated cost of the work, to improve and repair alleys and sidewalks, and to construct (see Exhibit B for law of assessment for service sewers) sidewalks of such form and materials as they may determine, and to pay the total cost of said work from appropriations for assessment and permit work.

No property except that of the United States or the District of Columbia, and property owned by foreign governments for legation purposes shall be exempt from assessments for improvements. March 3, 1903 (32 Stats., 961).

Notice must be given by advertisement, twice a week for two weeks, in two newspapers published in the city of Washington, of any such assessment work proposed to be done, designating the location and kind of work, specifying the kind of materials to be used, the estimated cost, and fixing a time and place when and where property owners about to be assessed may appear and present objections thereto and for hearing thereof. One-half of the total cost of such improvements, including expenses of assessment, must be charged against and become a lien upon abutting property, and assessment therefor must be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of such property.

Notices of the levying of such assessments must be served upon each lot owner, if he or she be a resident of the District and his or her residence known; and if he or she be a nonresident of the District, or his or her residence unknown, such notice must be served upon his or her agent or tenant, as the case may be; and if there be no agent or tenant known to the Commissioners, then they shall give notice of such assessment by advertisement, twice a week for two weeks, in some newspaper published in the District. Service of such notice where owner or his or her tenant or agent resides in the District must be either personal or by leaving the same with some person of suitable age, at the residence or place of business of such agent, owner, or tenant, and return of such service must be made in writing and filed in the office of the Commissioners. The costs of publication of notice and service of notices are paid out of the appropriation for assessment and permit work.

One-half of the cost of such work must be paid to the collector of taxes as follows: One-third within sixty days after service of notice of assessment, without interest; one-third within one year, and the remainder within two years from date of service of notice, interest being charged at 8 per cent per annum from date of service of notice on amounts unpaid at expiration of sixty days after service of notice of assessment.

Any property upon which such assessment and accrued interest thereon, or any part thereof, remains unpaid at expiration of two years from date of service of notice of assessment shall be subject to sale therefor under the same conditions and penalties imposed for nonpayment of general taxes. If any property, assessed as heretofore explained, shall become liable to sale for any other assessment or tax whatever, then the assessments levied as hereinbefore explained become immediately due and payable, and the property against which they are levied may be sold therefor, together with the accrued interest thereon and the costs of advertising to date of such sale.

Property owners who request improvements under the permit system must deposit, in advance, with the collector of taxes, an amount equal to one-half the estimated cost of such improvements, and in such cases it is not necessary to give notices, as hereinbefore stated.

All moneys received by the collector of taxes for work done upon request of property owners must be deposited by him in the United States Treasury to the credit of the permit fund.

Upon completion of the work done, as aforesaid, at request of property owners, the Commissioners must repay to the then current appropriation for assessment and permit work, out of the permit fund, a sum equivalent to one-half the cost of the work, and shall return to the depositors from the said fund, when application is made therefor, any surplus that may remain over and above one-half the cost of the work. (28 Stat., 247 and 248.)

HOUSE CONNECTIONS.

The cost of service connections with water mains and sewers is assessed against the lots for which said connections are made, and collected in same manner and upon same conditions as to notice as provided for assessment work. (28 Stat., 248.)

OPENING, WIDENING, ETC., OF MINOR STREETS AND ALLEYS.

[See Exhibit D.]

EXTENSIONS OF STREETS AND AVENUES.

In the case of extensions of streets and avenues the Commissioners are authorized to petition the supreme court of the District of Columbia for the condemnation of land necessary for such extension, said court appointing a jury for that purpose, and the jury making return of benefits and damages to abutting property. (Act of March 3, 1899.) Assessments are then levied for benefits to abutting property, such assessments being payable in five equal annual installments, with interest at 4 per cent per annum after sixty days from confirmation of verdict of jury; but in cases of awards for damages only that part of said award is paid by the District as may be in excess of assessment for benefits, and there is credited on assessment for benefits the amount of any award for damages not in excess of said assessment. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

If the aggregate amount of benefits to be assessed as determined by the jury is less than one-half of the amount of award for damages, the Commissioners may, in their discretion, reject the award and assessment, and all proceedings thereunder shall in that event be null and void. (Act of June 6, 1900.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR WATER MAINS.

[See Exhibit B for law on this subject in lieu of portion canceled.]

All moneys received on account of laying of water mains and all other moneys received on account of the water department must be deposited to the credit of the water fund, to be used exclusively for the support of the water department. (L. A., June 23, 1873.)

EXEMPTION FROM ASSESSMENT FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The only property exempt from assessment for improvements is that of the United States and the District of Columbia. (Act of July 1, 1902.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR REMOVING OR SECURING DANGEROUS STRUCTURES.

The costs of removing or securing, by the District of Columbia, dangerous structures, upon refusal of neglect of owners to perform such work after due notice, must be assessed against the land upon which structure or structures stand or stood, and unless such assessment is paid within ninety days from service of notice the same shall bear interest at rate of 10 per cent per annum from date of assessment until paid and shall be collected as general taxes are collected. (30 Stat., 123.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR INCLOSING DANGEROUS WELLS, ETC.

The cost of fencing or otherwise inclosing, by the District of Columbia, lots upon which exist uncovered wells or other dangerous holes or excavations, after neglect or refusal of owner to perform such work upon due notice, shall be assessed as a tax against the property on which such nuisances exist, the tax so assessed to bear interest at rate of 10 per cent per annum and to be carried on regular tax rolls and collected in manner provided for collection of other taxes. (30 Stat., 924.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR REMOVAL OF WEEDS.

The expense of removal, by the District of Columbia, of weeds of 4 inches or more in height from unoccupied land in the city of Washington or its more densely populated suburbs, upon failure or neglect of owner to perform such work, shall be assessed against the property on which such weeds were located, and said assessments shall bear interest at rate of 10 per cent per annum until paid, shall be carried on regular tax rolls of the District, and paid in manner provided for collection of general taxes. (30 Stat., 959.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR DRAINING LOTS.

In case owner or owners of lots, after due notice, fail or neglect to connect such lots with water mains and sewers, as required by law, the Commissioners shall cause such connections to be made, the expense to be paid out of the emergency fund, such expense, with necessary costs of advertising, to be assessed as a tax against such lots, which tax shall be carried on regular tax rolls and be collected in manner provided for collection of other taxes. (29 Stat., 126.)

The Commissioners are also authorized to make such connections upon any street or avenue about to be paved or otherwise improved before any such pavement or other permanent works are put down, the costs of such connections to be assessed as explained above. (20 Stat., 107; 28 Stat., 144; 29 Stat., 126.)

SPECIAL POLICEMEN AT STREET-RAILWAY CROSSINGS.

The Commissioners are authorized and required to station special policemen at such street-railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as they may deem necessary, the expense of such services to be paid pro rata by the respective railway companies. (30 Stat., 489.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR CLEANING OF OFFENSIVE CESSPOOLS.

For cleaning offensive cesspools, by the District of Columbia, in cases where owners or other responsible parties fail or neglect to perform such work, after due notice, the Commissioners are authorized to assess the cost thereof as a tax against the property benefited, which tax shall be carried on the regular tax roll and collected in the manner provided for collection of other taxes. (30 Stat., 233.)

LIGHTING TRACKS OF STEAM RAILWAY COMPANIES.

All railway companies using engines propelled by steam must pay the District of Columbia for the lighting of the streets, avenues, lands, and grounds through which their tracks may be laid. In case of default of such payment, actions at law may be maintained by the District of Columbia against said railway companies. (22 Stat., 466.)

COSTS OF ERECTION OF FIRE ESCAPES.

If the owners, proprietors, lessees, or trustees of buildings used as factories, manufactories, tenement houses, seminaries, colleges, academies, hospitals, or asylums fail to provide such buildings with fire escapes, standpipes, ladders, lights, and alarm gongs, as required by law, after due notice from the Commissioners, such fire escapes, etc., must be erected by the Commissioners, and the costs thereof assessed as a tax against the building on which they are erected and the ground upon which the same stands, and the Commissioners shall issue tax-lien certificates against such buildings and grounds for the amount of such assessment, bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, which certificates may be turned over by the Commissioners to the contractor for performing the work. (28 Stat., 810.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR REMOVING SNOW, ICE, DIRT, ETC.

In case the owner or tenant of any house, lot, building, or land shall neglect to cause to be removed snow, ice, sand, dirt, gravel, etc., from paved sidewalks adjacent to said property, as required by law, the Commissioners shall cause removal of same, the costs of which shall be assessed as a tax against the property to which the sidewalks in question belong, and the said tax, so assessed, shall be carried on the regular tax roll and collected in manner provided for collection of other taxes. (28 Stat., 809.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR PAVING STREETS ADJACENT TO STREET-RAILWAY TRACKS.

When any street or avenue through which a street railway runs shall be paved, such railway companies shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of such roads and for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such tracks, on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair; and when street railways cross any street or avenue the pavement between the tracks of such railway shall, at the expense of the company owning the tracks, be made to conform to the pavement used upon such street or avenue. If any street-railway company shall neglect or refuse to perform the work required, said pavement shall be laid by the District of Columbia and the costs collected from such company by issuing certificates of indebtedness against the property, real or personal, of such railway company, which certificates shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until paid, and which, until paid, shall remain a lien upon the property on or against which they are issued, together with the franchise of said company; and if such certificates are not paid within one year the Commissioners may proceed to sell the property against which they are issued, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due, such sale to be first advertised daily for one week in some newspaper published in the city of Washington, and to be at public auction, to the highest bidder. (20 Stat., 106.)

Taxation of personal property.

The board of personal tax appraisers consists of the assessor, chairman, and the two members of the board of assistant assessors detailed to that duty as hereinbefore explained. (Act of July 1, 1902, and 28 Stat., 282.)

The assessor is required to annually cause to be prepared a printed blank schedule of all tangible personal property and of general merchandise, stock in trade, owned or held in trust, or otherwise, subject to taxation, and of the classes of corporations and companies to be assessed, together with the rate of tax prescribed, to which shall be appended an affidavit in blank, setting forth that the return presents a full and true statement of all such personal property, taxable capital, or other basis of assessment, or either, as the case may be.

When said schedule is ready for delivery, notice thereof must be given by the assessor by advertisement for three successive secular days in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, and a copy of said schedule must be delivered to any citizen applying therefor at the office of the assessor. These schedules must be filled out and sworn to, and returned to the office of the assessor within thirty days after the last publication of advertisement. The members of the board of personal tax appraisers are authorized to administer, without charge, oaths for this purpose. For failure to make return within specified time, 20 per cent of assessed valuation of personal property is added.

Upon the filing of these returns, the two members of the board of assistant assessors designated by the assessor to assess personal property must, under the direction and supervision of the assessor, assess personal property. If the board of personal tax appraisers is not satisfied as to the correctness of any return of personal property, they may reject the same, and said board, or any one of the members thereof, may, from the best information he or they can procure, by making such an examination of the personal property as may be practicable, assess the same in such amount as may to him or them seem just, and notice of the rejection of the return shall be given to the party interested by leaving the same at the address given in said return.

In all cases, however, there is the right of appeal to the board of personal-tax appeals, hereinafter referred to, within fifteen days after delivery of said notice of rejection. Any person making a false affidavit as to taxation of personal property is deemed guilty of perjury, and, upon conviction, is subject to the penalties provided for that offense.

If the personal-tax appraisers fail to complete any of the duties required by law to be performed by them within the time specified, the taxation based upon the same is not, by reason thereof, invalid, but the appraisers must proceed with all reasonable diligence to complete such duties, and their acts are valid as if performed within the time provided therefor.

If at any time within any current year property subject to taxation shall be discovered to have been omitted from assessment the board of personal-tax appraisers shall immediately assess the same for the then current year, giving notice in writing to the persons or corporation so assessed, who shall have the right of appeal within ten days from date of said notice.

BOARD OF PERSONAL-TAX APPEALS.

The board of five (act of July 1, 1902, and 28 Statutes, 282) assistant assessors, with the assessor as chairman, compose a board of personal-tax appeals, which must convene, in a place to be provided therefor by the assessor, on the first Monday in February of each year, and continue in session to and including the second Monday in March of each year (33 Stat., 563), public notice of the time and place of such meeting having been given by advertisement for two consecutive secular days in two daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia. It is the duty of this board, between the day of convening and December 15 of each year, to hear all appeals made by any person or persons against the assessments made by the board of personal-tax appraisers, and to impartially equalize the valuation of said personal property as the basis for assessment.

Any four members of said board shall constitute a quorum for business, and in the absence of the assessor a temporary chairman may be chosen. The board is empowered to diminish or increase such assessments as they may believe to have been returned at other than their true value to such amount as in their opinion may be the value thereof, and the action of the board in such cases is final.

DISTRAINT AND SALE.

When the taxes on personal property due and payable in each year shall not be paid on or before the 1st of June, the collector of taxes or his deputy may distrain sufficient goods and chattels found within the District of Columbia and belonging to the person charged with such tax to pay the taxes remaining due, together with the penalty thereon, and the costs that may accrue; and for want of such goods and chattels said collector of taxes may levy upon and sell at auction the estate and interest of such person in any parcel of land in said District; and in the case of the levy on any estate or interest in land the proceedings subsequent to sale thereof are the same as provided by law in the case of sales for arrears of taxes against real estate; and in case of distraint of personal property or the levy upon real estate, as aforesaid, the collector of taxes must immediately proceed to advertise the same by public notice, to be posted in the office of said collector, and by advertisement three times within one week, in one or more of the daily newspapers published in said District, stating the time when and the place where such property will be sold, the last publication to be at least six days before the date of sale, and if the said taxes and penalty thereon, and the costs and expenses which shall have accrued thereon, shall not be paid before the day fixed for such sale, which must not be less than ten days after said levy or taking of said property, the collector must proceed to sell at public auction in his office to the highest bidder such property, or so much thereof as may be needed to pay such taxes, penalties, and accrued costs and expenses of such distraint and sale. Said collector must report in detail in writing every distraint and sale of personal property to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, and his accounts in respect to every such distraint or sale must forthwith be submitted to the auditor of the District of Columbia and be audited by him. Any surplus resulting from such sale over and above such taxes, costs, and expenses must be paid into the Treasury, and upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the goods and chattels aforesaid must be paid to him or them upon the certificate of the collector of taxes stating in full the amount of such excess.

"That hereafter when the collector of taxes shall distrain any goods and chattels in order to enforce payment of taxes levied under the aforesaid act, approved July 1, 1902, the goods and chattels so seized shall be kept in a safe and convenient place until the day of the sale thereof; and the sale of said goods and chattels shall be at public auction, at such place as the collector of taxes may designate: Provided, however, That no such goods and chattels shall be sold upon any bid not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid therefor is not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs thereon, said property thereupon shall be bid off by the said collector of taxes in the name of and by the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may sell the same at private sale to satisfy the tax, penalty, and cost thereafter without further notice." (33 Stat., 564.)

RATE OF TAXATION ON PERSONAL PROPERTY.

On all tangible personal property assessed at a fair cash value (over and above the exemptions provided), including vessels, ships, boats, tools, implements, horses and other animals, carriages, wagons, and other vehicles, there must be paid 1½ per cent on the assessed value thereof.

"Dealers in general merchandise of every description shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 1½ per cent on the average stock in trade for the preceding year.

"After the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons entering the District of Columbia subsequent to June 30 in each year and establishing a place of business for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, either at private sale or auction, or engaging in the business of common carrier by vessels, ships, or boats, to conduct such business until a sworn statement of the value of such stock, vessels, ships, and boats has been filed with the assessor of the District of Columbia, who shall thereupon render a bill for the unexpired portion of the fiscal year at the same rate as other personal taxes are levied: Provided, That this shall not apply to vessels, ships, or boats if it shall be made to appear by affidavit that any vessel, ship, or boat has been assessed for taxation and the taxes paid elsewhere.

"The assessor is hereby authorized to reassess said stock whenever, in his judgment, it has been undervalued. The goods, wares, and merchandise of any person or persons who shall fail to pay the tax required by this paragraph within three days after beginning business shall be subject to distraint, and it shall be the duty of the assessor to place bills therefor in the hands of the collector of taxes, who shall seize sufficient of the goods of the delinquent to satisfy said tax: Provided, That said owner shall have the right of redemption within thirty days on payment of said tax, to which shall be added a penalty of 1 per cent, together with the costs of seizure. The collector shall sell such goods as are not redeemed at public auction, after advertisement for the three days preceding said sale." (33 Stat., 563.)

Hotel companies and the proprietors of hotels are required to pay 1½ per cent on the assessed value of their furniture.

Each national bank, as the trustee for its stockholders, through its president or cashier, and all other incorporated banks and trust companies in the District of Columbia, through their presidents or cashiers, and all gas, electric lighting, and telephone companies, through their proper officers, must make affidavit to the board of personal-tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August each year as to the amount of its or their gross earnings for the preceding year ending the 30th day of June, and must pay per annum on such gross earnings as follows: Each national bank and all other incorporated banks and trust companies, respectively, 6 per cent; each gas company, 5 per cent; each electric lighting and telephone company, 4 per cent. And in addition thereto the real estate owned by each national or other incorporated bank and each trust, gas, electric lighting, and telephone company in the District of Columbia is taxed as other real estate in said District. Street railroad companies pay 4 per cent per annum on their gross receipts and other taxes, which shall be construed to mean that all street railroad companies shall pay 4 per cent per annum on their gross receipts within the District of Columbia and other taxes as provided by existing law. (33 Stats., 564.) Insurance companies pay 1½ per cent on premium receipts.

All companies, incorporated or otherwise, who guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, and all companies who furnish abstracts of titles to real property, or who insure real estate titles, shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 1½ per cent of their gross receipts in the District of Columbia. (Ibid.)

Savings banks having no capital stock and paying interest to their depositors must, through their president or cashier, make affidavit to the board of personal-tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August in each year as to the amount of their surplus and undivided profits and pay a sum equal to 1½ per cent on the amount of their surplus and undivided profits on the 30th day of June preceding. That hereafter, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1904, incorporated savings banks paying interest to their depositors shall, through their president, or cashier, make report under oath to the board of personal-tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August in each year as to the amount of their gross earnings, less the amount paid as interest to their depositors for the preceding year ending June 30, and shall pay thereon to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 4 per cent per annum. (Ibid.)

The capital stock of all corporations other than those herein provided for, organized in the District of Columbia or under the laws of any of the States or Territories of the United States, chiefly for the purpose of, and transacting business within, the District of Columbia, except those exempted by the laws relating to the District of Columbia, is appraised in bulk at its fair cash value by the board of personal-tax appraisers, and the corporation issuing the same is liable for the tax thereon according to such value, and must pay a sum equal to 1½ per cent on the assessed valuation thereof; but from the assessed valuation of such capital stock is first deducted the value of any and all real estate owned by such corporation in said District, which real estate is separately taxed against said corporation: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph contained shall be construed to include business companies which, by reason of or in addition to incorporation, receive no special franchise or privilege; but all such corporations shall be rated, assessed, and taxed as individuals conducting business in similar lines are rated, assessed, and taxed. (Ibid.)

Building associations in the District of Columbia shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 2 per cent per annum on their entire gross earnings for the preceding year ending June 30. (Ibid.)

All taxes levied under the foregoing provisions of this law are due, payable, and collectible in May of each year, and are subject to the same penalties for nonpayment thereof as the general tax on real estate, until distraint or sale.

Private banks or bankers, not incorporated, pay a tax of $500 per annum. General brokers pay a tax of $250 per annum. The Washington Stock Exchange pays $500 per annum in lieu of tax on members thereof for business done on said exchange. Any broker who is a member of a regularly organized stock exchange located outside of the District of Columbia, and transacting a brokerage business therein, pays $100 per annum. If any person or firm shall have paid the tax provided for banks and bankers, such person or firm can not again be taxed as a broker or brokers. Note brokers pay a tax of $100 per annum. Exceptions are made of cooperative associations whose business is restricted to the members of such association.

The taxes for private banks and bankers, general brokers, and note brokers date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following. Said taxes date from the first day of the month in which the liability begins, and payment must be made for a proportionate amount.

EXEMPTIONS.

The following personal property is exempt from taxation:

The personal property of all library, benevolent, charitable, and scientific institutions incorporated under the laws of the United States or of the District of Columbia and not conducted for private gain.

Libraries, schoolbooks, wearing apparel, and all family portraits. (Ibid.)

Household and other belongings, not held for sale, to the value of $1,000, owned by the occupant of any dwelling house or other place of abode, in which such household and other belongings may be located.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF LAW.

Any person violating any of the provisions of the personal-tax law is liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500 for each offense, such penalty to be imposed upon conviction in the police court of the District as other fines and penalties are imposed, and in default of payment of such penalty the person or persons so convicted shall be imprisoned, in the discretion of the court, not exceeding six months. (Act approved July 1, 1902.)

LICENSES.

All licenses are issued by the assessor, over his hand and official seal. No person is permitted to carry on any business, trade, profession, or calling, for which a license is imposed, without having first obtained such license. Applications for licenses must be made to the assessor, and no license can be granted until payment for the same shall have been made. Each license must specify the name of the person to whom issued, the business, trade, profession, calling, etc., for which it is granted, and the location at which such business is to be carried on. Licenses may be assigned or transferred upon application, under the terms and conditions applicable to the original granting of the same, and the assessor must issue a certificate of such transfer upon the payment of a fee of 50 cents. When more than one business, trade, profession, calling, etc., for which a license is prescribed, shall be carried on by the same person, a license must be obtained for each such business, etc. Licenses are good only for the location designated thereon, and no license can be issued for more than one place of business without payment of separate tax for each. All licenses date from the 1st of November and expire on the 31st of October following, except those specially designated in the following list. Licenses issued at any time after beginning of license year date from first day of month of issue and end the last day of license year, payment being made for proportionate amount of license tax. In cases where license is less than $5 per annum they terminate one year from first day of month of issue. No one holding a license is permitted to allow any other person charged with a separate license to operate under his license. All licenses must be conspicuously posted on premises of the licensee, and be accessible at all times for inspection by police officers or others authorized in that respect. Licensees having no located place of business must exhibit their licenses when requested to do so by proper authorities.

Applications for licenses for hotels and theaters must have written approval of inspector of buildings and chief of fire department. Any license issued to proprietor of a theater or other public place of amusement may be terminated by the Commissioners whenever it shall appear to them that after due notice the person holding such license shall have failed to comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioners for the public decency. (Act of March 1, 1901.)

Proprietors of hotels can not obtain a license for less than $30 per annum.

An act to prevent fraudulent transactions on the part of commission merchants, approved March 21, 1892, is made applicable to auctioneers, their agents, and employees.

Drivers of licensed passenger vehicles, while transacting such business, must wear upon their breasts a badge numbered to correspond with license of his vehicle, such badge being furnished by District of Columbia upon payment of fee of 50 cents.

In addition to license for proprietors of livery stables, they must obtain licenses for any vehicles owned by them occupying public stands.

The Commissioners must approve applications for licenses for vehicles for transportation of passengers operated over a definite route.

For entertainments given in church premises or private residences, where the proceeds are for church or charitable purposes and no rental is charged, no license is required.

Applications for licenses for shooting galleries must be accompanied with certificate from inspector of buildings, that suitable precautions have been taken for public safety, and with written authority from majority of occupants and residents on the same side of the square in which proposed gallery is to be located, and also on confronting side of the square fronting opposite to the same. The chief of police is authorized to prescribe the caliber, firearms, and kind of cartridges to be used.

The Commissioners have discretion to refuse licenses for merry-go-rounds, flying horses, etc.

Applications for licenses for massage establishments, mediums, clairvoyants, soothsayers, fortune tellers, and palmists must have the approval of the chief of police.

Hucksters are furnished with badges corresponding to number of license, which must be worn while transacting business, in addition to a corresponding number which must be attached to their vehicles. Hucksters' licenses need not be procured by persons bringing and selling at the several markets produce of their own raising.

The fire marshal must approve applications for licenses for buildings for storage of inflammable materials.

Persons violating any of the provisions of the license law, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia, are punishable by a fine of not more than $500 for each offense, and in default of payment, by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, in the discretion of the court. EXHIBIT B.

An act authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers in the District of Columbia, the levying of assessments therefor, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, whenever in their judgment the same may be necessary for the public safety, health, comfort, or convenience, to construct water mains and service sewers in any street, avenue, road, or alley in the District of Columbia; and the assessor of said District shall levy assessments for the same against abutting property in the amount and manner hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. That for laying or constructing water mains in the District of Columbia assessments shall be levied at the rate of $1.25 per linear front foot against all lots or land abutting upon that part of the street, avenue, road, or alley in which a water main shall be laid, and that for laying or constructing service sewers in the District of Columbia assessments shall be levied at the rate of $1 per linear front foot against all lots or land abutting upon that part of the street, avenue, road, or alley in which a sewer shall be laid: Provided, That assessments for water mains and service sewers in the case of lots or parcels of land not more than 100 feet in depth shall be levied upon the fronts or rears of such lots or parcels of land, and not upon both the fronts and rears of such lots or parcels of land; but lots or parcels of land more than 100 feet in depth, except corner lots, shall be assessed upon both their fronts and rears when water mains or service sewers are laid abutting the same: Provided, That corner lots shall be assessed for water mains and service sewers only on their short fronts with a depth of not exceeding 100 feet; any excess of the other front over 100 feet shall be subject to assessment, as hereinbefore provided: Provided, That the areas of all lots or parcels of land which have been assessed for water mains by the square foot under any previous act of Congress, or of the late legislative assembly of the District of Columbia, shall not be again assessed for water mains: Provided, That assessments for water mains or service sewers shall not be levied under this act against lots or parcels of land not more than 100 feet in depth which have theretofore been assessed by their linear front feet by authority of any act of Congress or of the late corporation of Georgetown, and in any assessment or reassessment levied under the provisions of this act credit shall be allowed for any amount which may have been heretofore paid upon any water main or service sewer assessment levied against the same portion of the area of any lot or parcel of land: Provided further, That when the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall deem it advantageous to lay water mains or service sewers on each side of any street, avenue, road, or alley assessments shall be levied at the rate, within the time and in the manner in this section provided for, against the lots abutting the side of the street, avenue, road, or alley in which the water main or service sewer is laid.

SEC. 3. That the assessor of the District of Columbia shall give notices as herein provided of the levying of assessments for water mains and service sewers. Assessments shall be levied within sixty days after the completion of the main or service sewer, and the owner or owners affected by such assessments shall be notified that the same have been levied by a notice which shall be served upon the owner of the lot or parcel of land if he or she be a resident of the District of Columbia, and his or her residence be known. If the owner be a nonresident or his or her residence be unknown, the notice shall be served on his or her agent or tenant. The service of such notice, where the owner or his or her agent or tenant resides in the District of Columbia, shall be personal or by leaving the same with some person of suitable age, either a member of his family or in his employ, at the residence or place of business of such owner, agent, or tenant; and return of such service, stating the manner thereof, shall be made in writing under oath and filed in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia. If there be no agent or tenant known to said assessor, and the owner or owners be not residents of the District of Columbia, or if the owner be a resident of the District of Columbia and can not be found therein, and no person of suitable age as aforesaid can be found at his or her residence or place of business, notice shall be given by advertisement once a week for three successive weeks in some daily newspaper published in said District, and in said publication of said notice each several piece of property shall be described in a separate paragraph, and the cost of such advertisement shall be added to the amount of said assessment and collected in the same manner that said assessment is collected.

SEC. 4. That assessments for water mains and service sewers shall be payable in three equal installments, the first of which shall be due and payable without interest within thirty days from date of service of notice or of the last publication of notice, as the case may be, the second within one year, and the third within two years from the date of assessment, and interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum shall be charged on all amounts which shall remain unpaid at the expiration of thirty days from the date of service of notice or last publication, as the case may be; but the owner of the property assessed may, at his option, at any time after the levying of such assessment, pay the same in full; and the discount heretofore allowed for payment of assessments for water mains within thirty days from date of service of notice of assessments shall not be allowed hereafter: Provided, That if any installment of any assessment for water main or service sewer levied under the provisions of this act shall not be paid when due and payable the property against which said assessment was levied may be sold for said delinquent installment at the next ensuing annual tax sale in the same manner and under the same conditions as property sold for delinquent general taxes, if said installment shall not have been paid prior to said sale.

SEC. 5. That property in the county of Washington, not subdivided into blocks or lots, or both, shall not be assessed for water mains or service sewers until subdivided: Provided, That where houses are built on any unsubdivided land and connection is made with a water main or service sewer, assessment shall be made as herein provided for in the case of subdivided property by assessing a frontage of 50 feet on each side of said connection with a depth of 100 feet, except that no double assessment shall be levied; said assessment to be levied within sixty days after said connection is made; and if such unsubdivided land is thereafter subdivided into blocks or lots, such lots shall be assessed as herein provided as to subdivided lands, but the 50 feet on each side of said connection, with a depth of 100 feet, shall not be again assessed: Provided further, That hereafter assessments at the rate and in the manner herein provided for shall be levied against each lot or parcel of land abutting any water main or service sewer in all subdivisions of land, within sixty days after the recording of such subdivision in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, except in cases where said lots or parcels of land have been previously assessed for the same main or service sewer.

SEC. 6. That in all cases where water mains have heretofore been laid and assessments therefor against abutting lots or land not levied pending the introduction of water into such lots or land, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 8, 1898, such assessments shall be levied under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That the assessor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed in cases where water-main assessments, or assessments for service sewers, may be quashed, canceled, set aside, or declared void by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or may otherwise be canceled or set aside, by reason of an imperfect or erroneous description of the lot or parcel of ground against which the same shall have been levied, by reason of such tax or assessment not having been authenticated by the proper officer or by reason of a defective return of service of notice, or for any technical reason other than the right of the authorities of the District of Columbia to levy assessment or lay the main or service sewer in respect of which assessment was levied, to relevy such assessment at the rate and in the manner provided for in this act: Provided, That such reassessment shall be made within sixty days from date of such cancellation.

SEC. 8. That all sums received by the collector of taxes under the provisions of this act on account of assessments levied for the construction of service sewers shall be credited to the appropriation under which the sewer was constructed for the fiscal year in which such sums shall be received.

SEC. 9. That a service sewer within the meaning of the provisions of this act shall be a sewer with which connection may be directly made for the purpose of providing sewerage facilities to abutting property, and such sewers shall be so indicated on the records of the sewer division of the engineer department of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved, April 22, 1904.

EXHIBIT C.

An act to amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1904, the board of personal tax appeals of the District of Columbia shall convene on the first Monday in February of each year, and continue in session to and including the second Monday in March of each year, instead of convening on the 15th day of November and continuing in session until the 15th day of December in each year, as now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," is hereby amended as follows:

Strike out paragraph 3 of section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Dealers in general merchandise of every description shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 1½ per cent on the average stock in trade for the preceding year.

"After the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons entering the District of Columbia subsequent to June 30 in each year and establishing a place of business for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, either at private sale or at auction, or engaging in the business of common carrier by vessels, ships, or boats, to conduct such business until a sworn statement of the value of such stock, vessels, ships, and boats has been filed with the assessor of the District of Columbia, who shall thereupon render a bill for the unexpired portion of the fiscal year at the same rate as other personal taxes are levied: Provided, That this shall not apply to vessels, ships, or boats if it shall be made to appear by affidavit that any vessel, ship, or boat has been assessed for taxation and the taxes paid elsewhere.

"The assessor is hereby authorized to reassess said stock whenever in his judgment it has been undervalued. The goods, wares, and merchandise of any person or persons who shall fail to pay the tax required by this paragraph within three days after beginning business shall be subject to distraint, and it shall be the duty of the assessor to place bills therefor in the hands of the collector of taxes, who shall seize sufficient of the goods of the delinquent to satisfy said tax: Provided, That said owner shall have the right of redemption within thirty days on payment of said tax, to which shall be added a penalty of 1 per cent, together with the costs of seizure. The collector shall sell such goods as are not redeemed at public auction after advertisement for the three days preceding said sale."

That that part of the proviso in paragraph 5, section 6, relating to street railroads "shall be construed to mean that all street railroad companies shall pay 4 per cent per annum on their gross receipts within the District of Columbia and other taxes as provided by existing law."

Strike out paragraph 6 of section 6 and substitute following therefor:

"All companies, incorporated or otherwise, who guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, and all companies who furnish abstracts of titles to real property, or who insure real estate titles, shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 1½ per cent of their gross receipts in the District of Columbia."

In section 6, at the end of paragraph 7, add—

"That hereafter, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1904, incorporated savings banks paying interest to their depositors shall, through their president or cashier, make report under oath to the board of personal tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August of each year as to the amount of their gross earnings, less the amount paid as interest to their depositors for the preceding year ending June 30, and shall pay thereon to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 4 per cent per annum."

In section 6 the proviso of paragraph 8 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Provided, That nothing in this paragraph contained shall be construed to include business companies which, by reason of or in addition to incorporation, receive no special franchise or privilege; but all such corporations shall be rated, assessed, and taxed as individuals conducting business in similar lines are rated, assessed, and taxed."

Section 6, paragraph 9, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Building associations in the District of Columbia shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia 2 per cent per annum on their entire gross earnings for the preceding year ending June 30."

In section 6 the second portion of paragraph 10 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Second. Libraries, schoolbooks, wearing apparel, and all family portraits."

In section 6, at the end of paragraph 12, add—

"That hereafter when the collector of taxes shall distrain any goods and chattels in order to enforce payment of taxes levied under the aforesaid act approved July 1, 1902, the goods and chattels so seized shall be kept in a safe and convenient place until the day of the sale thereof; and the sale of said goods and chattels shall be at public auction, at such place as the collector of taxes may designate: Provided, however, That no such goods and chattels shall be sold upon any bid not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid therefor is not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs thereon, said property thereupon shall be bid off by the said collector of taxes in the name of and by the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may sell the same at private sale to satisfy the tax, penalty, and cost thereafter without further notice."

In section 7, paragraph 38, at the end thereof, add—

"That hereafter it shall be unlawful for the licensee, owner, proprietor, or any employee of a licensee, owner, or proprietor of any barroom, or any other establishment in the District of Columbia in which intoxicating liquors of any kind or sold, to sell, give, or dispense in any manner intoxicating liquors of any kind to any person under the age of 21 years.

"Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be amenable to a fine of $25 or imprisonment for thirty days, or both, in the discretion of the court; and in addition to such penalty the license for the place in which such intoxicating liquors were sold to a minor shall be revoked."

Section 7, paragraph 45, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"That hereafter proprietors of bowling alleys in the District of Columbia shall pay to the collector of taxes of said District an annual license tax of $12 for each alley."

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved, April 28, 1904.

EXHIBIT D.

An act to amend chapter 55 of an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia."

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 55 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out sections 1608, 1609, 1610, 1611, 1612, and 1613, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 1608. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to open, extend, widen, or straighten alleys and minor streets in the District of Columbia under the following conditions, namely: First, upon the petition of the owners of more than one-half of the real estate in the square or block in which such alley or minor street is sought to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened, accompanied by a plat showing the opening, extension, widening, or straightening proposed; second, when the Commissioners deem that the public interests require such opening, extension, widening, or straightening; third, when the health officer of said District certifies to the necessity for the same on the grounds of public health: Provided, That a minor street shall be of a width of not less than 40 feet nor more than 60 feet and shall run through a square or block from one street to another.

"SEC. 1608a. That if in the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of an alley or minor street, or in the extension or widening of public streets or highways, an alley or part of an alley may have been, or may hereafter be, in the judgment of the said Commissioners, rendered useless or unnecessary, said Commissioners are authorized to close the same. That if the alley to be closed is an original alley, they may sell the land contained therein for cash at a price not less than the assessed value of contiguous lots. That if the alley is not an original alley, the title thereto shall revert to the owners of the land abutting thereon, but all such land shall be subject to the assessment for benefits hereinafter referred to.

"SEC. 1608b. That the said Commissioners are authorized to accept the dedication of an alley or alleys and in connection therewith to close any existing alley or alleys in the square or block in which such dedication is made upon the application of the owners of all the property abutting on such existing alley or alleys. That if the alley proposed to be closed is an original alley, the party or parties making the dedication and the parties applying for the closing of the alley or alleys shall present with such application a mutual agreement in writing and under seal, in duplicate, as to the future ownership of the land contained in the alley or alleys to be closed, together with two plats showing the alley or alleys divided into parcels, with the name of the future owner marked on each parcel, in accordance with such agreement. That copies of the order of the Commissioners accepting the dedication and closing the original or subdivisional alley, together with the said agreements and plats in the case of an original alley, shall be forwarded by said Commissioners to the surveyor and recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia for record, and thereafter the title to the land in such subdivisional alley shall revert to the owners of the land abutting thereon, and the title to the land in the original alley shall vest in the parties whose names appear on said plat in accordance with said agreement.

"SEC. 1608c. That the Commissioners are authorized to close any alley or part of alley the width of which is less than 10 feet upon the application in writing of the owners of all the abutting property. If the title to such closed alley is in the United States, the land shall be sold, as provided in section 1608a hereof; and if the title is not in the United States, the land shall revert as provided in said section.

"SEC. 1608d. That whenever the title in fee simple to an entire square is vested in one person or tenants in common or partners, and such owner or owners desire to improve said square by the erection thereon of a building covering not less than two-thirds of the area thereof, or to use said square for the purpose of some business enterprise, the Commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to order any alley or alleys in such square to be closed, and a copy of said order shall be filed with the surveyor and recorder of deeds of said District for record.

"SEC. 1608e. That whenever it becomes necessary to open, widen, extend, or straighten alleys or minor streets by condemnation the said Commissioners shall institute condemnation proceedings in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by a petition in rem particularly describing the land to be taken, which petition shall be accompanied by duplicate plats to be prepared by the surveyor of said District, showing the courses and boundaries of the alley or minor street proposed to be opened, widened, extended, or straightened, the number of square feet to be taken from each lot or part of lot in the square or block, showing the existing alleys or minor street in said square or block, and such other information as may be necessary for the purposes of such condemnation. Upon the filing of such petition, one copy of the plat, indorsed with the docket number of the case, shall be returned by the clerk of said court to the said surveyor for record in his office.

"SEC. 1608f. That the said court shall cause public notice of not less than ten days to be given of the filing of said proceedings, by advertisement in such manner as the court shall prescribe, which notice shall warn all persons having any interest in the proceedings to attend court at a day to be named in said notice and to continue in attendance until the court shall have made its final order ratifying and confirming the award of damages and assessment of benefits of the jury; and, in addition to such public notice, said court, whenever in its judgment it is practicable to do so, shall cause a copy of said notice to be served by the United States marshal for the District of Columbia, or his deputies, upon such owners of the fee of the land to be condemned as may be found by said marshal or his deputies within the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 1608g. That after the return of the marshal and the filing of proof of publication of the notice provided for in the preceding section, said court shall cause a jury of five judicious, disinterested men, not related to any person interested in the proceedings and not in the service or employment of the District of Columbia or of the United States, to be summoned by the said marshal, to which jurors said court shall administer an oath or affirmation that they are not interested in any manner in the land to be condemned nor in any way related to the parties interested therein, and that they will, without favor or partiality, to the best of their judgment, assess the damages each owner of land taken may sustain by reason of the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of said alley or minor street and the condemnation of lands for the purposes thereof, and assess the benefits resulting therefrom as hereinafter provided. The court, before accepting the jury, shall hear any objections that may be made to any member thereof, and shall have full power to decide upon all such objections, and to excuse any juror or cause any vacancy in the jury, when impaneled, to be filled; and after said jury shall have been organized and shall have viewed the premises, said jury shall proceed to hear and receive such evidence as may be offered or submitted on behalf of the District of Columbia and by any person or persons having any interest in the proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of said alley or minor street; but all such hearings shall be in the presence of the court and under its supervision and direction. When the hearing is concluded the jury, or a majority of them, shall return to said court, in writing, its verdict of the amount found to be due and payable as damages sustained by reason of the said opening, extension, widening, or straightening under the provisions hereof, and of the pieces or parcels of land benefited by such opening, extension, widening, or straightening, and the amount of the assessment for such benefits against the same.

"SEC. 1608h. That if a part only of any piece or parcel of ground shall be condemned, the jury, in determining its value, shall not take into consideration any benefits that may accrue to the remainder thereof from such opening, extension, widening, or straightening, but such benefits shall be considered in determining what assessment shall be made on or against such part of such piece or parcel of land as may not be taken as hereinbefore provided.

"SEC. 1608i. That the court shall have power to hear and determine any objections which may be filed to said verdict or award, and to set aside and vacate the same, in whole or in part, when satisfied that it is unjust or unreasonable, and in such event a new jury in the case, having the qualifications hereinbefore mentioned, shall be summoned, who shall proceed to assess the damages or benefits, as the case may be, in respect of the land as to which the verdict may be vacated, as in the case of the first jury: Provided, That the exceptions or objections to the verdict and award shall be filed within thirty days after the return of such verdict and award: And provided further, That if the court is satisfied that part of the verdict or award should be set aside or vacated, then and in that event, at the election of the said Commissioners, the court shall set aside and vacate the entire verdict or award and a new jury shall be summoned in the case as aforesaid. The verdict of a new jury summoned in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be final, and if the amount of damages assessed by any new jury summoned as aforesaid shall not be greater, or if the assessment of benefits shall not be less, than the amount assessed by the jury first summoned, according as the objection to the verdict may have been to the assessment of damages or benefits, the cost of the new jury shall be assessed against the property of the party or parties objecting, but if the party or parties should prevail by the verdict of the new jury, either in increasing his or their damages, or in diminishing the assessment for benefits, then, and in that event, the costs of the new jury shall be paid by the District of Columbia, and if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia do not elect that the entire verdict shall be set aside, and the same be set aside or vacated in part, the residue of the verdict and award shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 1608j. That said jury shall assess as benefits accruing by reason of said opening, extension, widening, or straightening an amount equal to the amount of damages as ascertained by them as hereinbefore provided, including $5 per day for the marshal and $5 per day for each juror for the services of each when actually employed, and all other expenses of such proceedings upon each lot or part of lot or parcel of land in the square or block in which such alley or minor street is to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened, and upon each lot, part of lot, or parcel of ground in the squares or blocks confronting the square in which such alley or minor street is to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened, which will be benefited by such opening, extension, widening, or straightening, in the proportion that said jury may find said lots, parts of lots, or parcels of land will be benefited.

"SEC. 1608k. That when the verdict of said jury shall have been finally ratified and confirmed by the court, as herein provided, the amounts of money awarded and adjudged to be payable for lands taken under the provisions hereof shall be paid to the owners of said lands by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, upon the warrants of the Commissioners of said District, out of any funds available therefor: Provided, That in all cases of payments the accounting officers shall take into account the assessment for benefits and the award for damages, and shall pay only such part of said award in respect of any lot as may be in excess of the assessment for benefits against the part of such lot not taken, and there shall be credited on said assessment the amount of said award not in excess of said assessment.

"SEC. 1608l. That when confirmed by the court the several assessments herein provided to be made shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed and shall be collected as special-improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after sixty days after the date of confirmation until paid. That said court may allow amendments in form or substance in any description of property proposed to be taken, or of property assessed for benefits, whenever such amendments will not interfere with the substantial rights of the parties interested, and any such amendment may be made after as well as before the order or judgment confirming the verdict or award aforesaid.

"SEC. 1609. That each juror shall receive as compensation the sum of $5 per day for his services during the time he shall be actually engaged in such services under the provisions hereof.

"SEC. 1610. That no appeal by any interested party from the decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia confirming the assessment or assessments of benefits or damages herein provided for, nor any other proceeding at law or in equity by such party against the confirmation of such assessment or assessments, shall delay or prevent the payment of award to others in respect to the property condemned, nor delay or prevent the taking of any of said property sought to be condemned, nor the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of such alley or minor street: Provided, however, That upon the final determination of said appeal or other proceeding at law or in equity, the amount found to be due and payable as damages sustained by reason of the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of said alley or minor street under the provisions hereof shall be paid as hereinbefore provided.

"SEC. 1611. That all money derived from the sale of land in which the United States is interested, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the credit of the United States.

"SEC. 1612. That in all cases where plats are required to be made under the provisions of this act, or where the said Commissioners shall deem it necessary that they shall be made in order to more effectually carry out any provision hereof, such plats shall be made by the surveyor of the District of Columbia, who shall require the person or persons desiring the same to deposit in advance a sum to defray the cost of preparing the same; any amount of such deposit remaining after the cost of such plats has been paid shall be refunded to the party so depositing: Provided, That plats ordered by the said Commissioners shall be prepared by said surveyor free of cost.

"SEC. 1613. That the validity of any condemnation proceeding under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the opening of alleys in the District of Columbia," approved July 22, 1892, or under the act of Congress entitled "An act to open, widen, and extend alleys in the District of Columbia," approved August 24, 1894, or under the sections of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia hereby repealed, shall not be affected by the want of proper notice to any proprietor of land in the square, except as to such proprietor; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that any such proprietor was not notified as required by said acts the said Commissioners may proceed under this act to condemn the land affected by the want of such notice."

Approved, February 23, 1905.

EXHIBIT F.

FEBRUARY 19, 1906.

Hon. HENRY L. WEST,
Commissioner, District of Columbia.

SIR: Referring to the expense of maintaining the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, in response to your direction for report, I respectfully beg leave to state that the police jurisdiction embraces the entire territory of the District, about 70 square miles in extent, and including 700 linear miles of streets and alleys and —— linear miles of roads. The territory includes the cities of Washington and Georgetown and numerous towns and villages, all well populated, the density of population gradually decreasing in the direction of the boundary lines or contiguous States of Maryland and Virginia, and the police distribution is made to conform to the requirements of the population and valuable improvements contained therein.

For the fiscal year 1904, the expenses of the department, including clerks, messengers, drivers, fuel, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and rent of police headquarters and substation house, were	$812,245
For sake of comparison with the larger cities it is fair to deduct rental of buildings, for on a general proposition most of the municipalities own their police houses. This decrease would be	2,880
Leaving as the expense	810,365

Washington and Georgetown contain a population of 259,100, the county or suburban section of the District of Columbia a population of 64,223. Thus it will be observed that there is a large population outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown requiring police protection. In addition to the citizens and their families included in this population may be found such valuable properties as the American University, Soldiers' Home, Government Hospital for the Insane, Naval Observatory, Methodist University, Episcopal University, and the various street railway improvements and parks.

The roads leading to the various towns, villages, and institutions are patronized not only by our own people, but by distinguished officials and visitors whose welfare must be guarded. There are in addition several bridge approaches which must be looked after, as they furnish means of escape for disorderly and criminal characters to outside jurisdictions.

The most emphatic argument in favor of considering the whole District of Columbia in connection with the expense for police service is shown by the following list of towns and villages with population, the roads and avenues leading to and from the same being necessarily largely patronized:

The population of the roads intervening between these places is 5,972.

It is quite evident that the police force has extensive life and property interests outside of the city of Washington to supervise and protect, aside from the people and traffic which is constantly carried on with the surrounding population and interests.

The river must be patrolled 7 miles below the city proper, 3 miles front and the Anacostia Branch, in all about 12 miles, which necessitates an expenditure as follows: One lieutenant, foot privates, boat, miscellaneous expenses—$13,140.

Within the city of Washington are located those important and distinguished official interests which are to be found in no other American city, the homes and official quarters of the President, Cabinet officers, Supreme Court, Senators, Representatives, and foreign legations.

It can not be questioned but that every freedom from annoyance should be afforded these persons and their residences. Experience warrants that special precautions be taken by the police to insure them against embarrassment or molestation; this in the absence of any other provision having been made. Aside from their official stations they are our distinguished citizens and residents.

Not writing as an alarmist, but that you may more fully appreciate the situation, the offices and homes of some of these prominent people are known to have been intruded upon and assaults have been committed by irresponsible persons with whom the police must deal. When the records show that 605 individuals said to have been suffering from mental impairments have been investigated by the police in the past year, 406 of whom were admitted to the Government Hospital for the Insane, some idea of the responsibility and delicacy of the situation may be had.

Proceeding, therefore, on the basis that the entire District of Columbia should be considered in comparing the police expense, and that unusual and superior intelligence is required of the agents within the city of Washington, which does not enter into conditions elsewhere, and, bearing in mind the further social conditions which do not prevail in northern cities, the expense in detail and its distribution will be considered.

In the District outside of Washington, which includes nine of the towns first mentioned and the Government Hospital for the Insane, with a population of 11,591 persons, the police detail is as follows: Two sergeants (mounted), seven privates (mounted), fourteen foot privates, two desk sergeants, two drivers, one laborer (two reliefs in twenty-four hours, or about nine men on duty at one time, and reserve duty)—$28,080.

In the District outside of Washington, which includes four more of the towns previously enumerated, two bridges and Rock Creek Park, reservoir, National Park, with a population of 5,198, police detail is as follows: Two sergeants (mounted), twelve mounted privates, fourteen foot privates, one desk sergeant, one laborer (three reliefs in twenty-four hours, or about nine men on duty at one time, and reserve duty)—$33,900.

In the District outside of Washington, which includes twenty towns and subdivisions previously enumerated, with railways, etc., and a population of 8,198, the police detail is as follows: Two sergeants (mounted), ten mounted privates, nine foot privates (three reliefs in twenty-four hours, or about seven men on duty at one time, and reserve duty)—$24,780.

In the District outside of Washington, which includes forty-nine towns and subdivisions previously mentioned, and a population of 27,693, the police detail is as follows: One lieutenant, three sergeants, forty-five foot privates, two sergeants (mounted), twelve mounted privates, two desk sergeants, two drivers, two laborers (three reliefs in twenty-four hours, or about seventeen men on duty at one time, three men detailed in the city and reserve duty)—$68,120.

The details made by order of the Commissioners to the police court, workhouse, health office, District building, etc., further diminishes the amount of cost. In their stead baliffs and watchmen should be employed—$25,320.

To the above should be added miscellaneous expenses—probably $12,000.

The many regulations promulgated by the Commissioners under the authority of Congress, which do not prevail elsewhere, require an active, constant, and intelligent work on the part of the force, and which accounts for the large number of arrests. The last year there were 32,016 cases of arrest, most of which were for misdemeanors or petty offenses, and the same percentage would hold good for 1904.

There are 373 private watchmen employed on the inside of Government buildings—State, War, and Navy, Interior, and other Departments—who change watch. But twenty-five of these perform outside duty, those at the Smithsonian Institution and Agricultural Department, where they have large grounds, and over all of which the police exercise jurisdiction, including the parks. The exterior of all Government property is supervised by the Metropolitan police. Watchmen are employed in the large office buildings of the Government, as they are in all large buildings in the principal cities of the country.

If the cases of arrest are in anywise considered to indicate the work required of the force in the District, it is by far the least expensive in the country.

Very respectfully,

RICHARD SYLVESTER,
Major and Superintendent.

Actual deficiency in the receipts from revenues of the District of Columbia and its proportionate share of repayments and sundry credits to meet the advances made by the United States Treasury on account of the proportionate part of appropriations charged to said District during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905			2,240,030.14

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, in all communities one of the objects of most tender consideration and solicitude is the maintenance and care of those of our fellow-citizens who unfortunately have become bereft of their reason. In all of the States and Territories institutions have been established and are maintained at great expense for the care of these unfortunates. The United States Government as a government maintains two—and, I belive, two only—of these institutions. One is located in the Indian Territory and the other is located in the District of Columbia.

I have taken the floor for the purpose of calling attention to the one located in the District of Columbia, known as St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the Insane. I think, Mr. Chairman, from facts in my possession it is time that the Congress of the United States knew something of the management, the control, and the conduct of this institution. At every session of Congress large sums of money are appropriated for its maintenance, great sums are annually expended for the care of its inmates. It is peculiarly an institution within the direct control of the Congress. During the month of February past there appeared in the Washington newspapers comments upon the management of this institution. These publications were of such a character that, as a Representative of this body, I felt that it was incumbent upon Congress to investigate that institution and ascertain, at least, whether or no the charges preferred against it were true. On the 18th day of February, 1906, there appeared in the Washington Times an article referring to this institution, which article I send to the Clerk's desk and desire to have read as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY PUSHING CAMPAIGN FOR PROPER CARE OF CRIMINAL INSANE—COMMITTEE REPORTS ON ALLEGED CONDITIONS AT ST. ELIZABETH'S—BILL BEFORE CONGRESS—RADICAL CHANGES ARE URGED BY THOSE INTERESTED IN MOVEMENT.

The Medico-Legal Society of the District is waging in Congress a campaign to secure the release of the criminal insane from the Government Hospital for the Insane in this city. The society looks upon the present system as a great wrong to the District and it has high hope that its efforts will meet with success at the present session.

Under the present law three classes of persons are committed to St. Elizabeth's—the indigent insane of the District of Columbia, insane soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy, and the criminal insane of the whole country, who enter the plea of insanity in a Federal court and have it sustained.

PRECEPTS OF BILL.

The bill introduced in Congress last week directs the Attorney-General to transfer the criminal insane now at St. Elizabeth's to State institutions, especially provided for the custody of the criminal insane, and in the future to send such persons directly to such institutions. The bill further provides the Attorney-General shall report to Congress the cost of building a pavilion for the criminal insane within the Federal prison at Atlanta.

The first provision of the bill is designed to give immediate relief; the second suggests a permanent solution of the whole problem.

Dr. Charles M. Emmons, who is taking a deep interest in the movement, says it is in the interest of the insane not criminal, whose misfortunes compel their confinement at St. Elizabeth's. He regards it as wholly unjust in action and wrong in principle.

COMMITTEE REPORT.

Doctor Emmons believes, moreover, that if the criminal insane were confined in a penitentiary, as, he says, they should be, the number of pleas of insanity would be very considerably reduced.

The criminal who knows a plea of insanity will not keep him out of prison—and a real prison—is not so likely to make it.

Dr. Charles M. Emmons and Attorney Richard P. Evans have just submitted their report to the society, and it was given out last night.

The committee disavowed any intention to reflect upon the integrity or ability of Dr. William A. White, the superintendent of the institution, who is an alienist of national reputation.

SOME COMPLAINTS MADE.

In speaking of the discipline at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, the committee says:

"It would appear from complaints and statements made to us that strait-jackets, handcuffs, etc., are in frequent use; that the 'feeding tube' has been upon occasions thrust through the nostril down the throat as a method of punishment and discipline, as well as of alleged necessity; that 'wringing out' by wet towels and 'toweling' with dry towels placed about the patient's neck and twisted from behind until the patient falls over semiconscious (sometimes with soap in the mouth) is not an uncommon practice; that the 'saddle' has been used at times, a contrivance upon which refractory patients are said to be placed in a reclining position, fastened hand, foot, and neck, and so that no movement is possible except to roll the eyes around a circumscribed area of the ceiling, and thus left for hours.

"Kicking and cuffing by attendants for failure to obey orders or do work properly, or for 'taking an extra spoonful of beans' at table, etc., is alleged. An incident is told of an attendant, disturbed at night by a somnambulistic patient, striking him in the mouth and knocking him down, and carrying his own hand in a bandage for several days in consequence; and of another attendant breaking a patient's leg in disciplining him.

MAKE PATIENTS FEAR.

"There are different ways of training a horse—but one attendant made the statement that he was instructed to make patients fear him, as he would a horse, etc., and he commenced doing so, his first day on, by knocking a patient down and choking him, after which 'he had no trouble with that one.'

"Many other like occurrences are reported, but these are more than sufficient, if true, to present a vivid contrast to the methods of gentleness and sympathy carried out in other institutions.

"The committee has no thought or idea that these practices, if they exist, are known to or permitted by the superintendent, but he is a very busy man, and has to leave all details of care and treatment to his subordinates. He personally told a member of the committee that the administrative details of improvements, expenditure of $1,500,000 during past years in new buildings, alterations of heating and lighting plant, landscape gardening, etc., his duties in connection with other hospital plans, calls as an expert alienist to distant points, his literary labors, financial responsibilities, etc., kept him working over hours and left no time for him to give personal medical attention to the patients in the hospital; and in all of the court cases in which the superintendent has testified he stated that he had no personal knowledge of the patients until brought to his attention by the court proceedings.

"The superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane and the United States attorney for the District of Columbia hold that the officials of the Soldiers' Homes have unlimited military authority over all who enter said Homes (although these officials are merely civilians and the National Home an incorporated institution); that said officials have delegated to them the authority of the Rules and Articles of War over the inmates of said Homes, and have the right and power to commit them to an insane asylum, at their pleasure, without due process or law, for an indefinite period (frequently for life), and their jurisdiction continues without limitation of term; that these honorably discharged soldiers and sailors have no right to an inquisition into their sanity by due process of law, and that the courts have no jurisdiction over them because they are not civilians.

LAW IN THE CASE.

"A majority of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia have taken a contrary view of the law, namely, Chief Justice Clabaugh and Justices Anderson, Wright, and Gould.

"Justice Barnard held with them in the Shaffer case, but recently he reversed himself in the case of Jesse Owsley, wherein he held the commitment legal and denied a motion for inquisition by a jury into the sanity of the ex-soldier.

"As stated in the report of Superintendent White, the cases of Alexander N. Willis and James L. Shaffer were decided adversely to the Government by Justices Wright and Barnard, and they were released and discharged, and the district attorney took appeals in both cases to the court of appeals. The records were printed and cases set for hearing at the January term, but on the first day of the term the District attorney, by order of the Attorney-General, dismissed his appeals in both cases.

"The inferences naturally follow that * * * said commitments are unconstitutional; that such honorably discharged soldiers and sailors are American citizens and entitled to due process of law where their liberty is concerned, and that they are not subject to unlimited authority and power of civilian officials, acting under alleged delegated military powers of the Rules and Articles of War, independent of the constitutional rights of the citizen and of the judiciary.

"The Willis case is no doubt exceptional; this is a brief of its history. An old man, but vigorous of body and intellect, prevailed upon to deed valuable property to a relative, with usual promises of support, etc. Drugged in New York, taken thence, unconscious, 1,000 miles to the Soldiers' Home, Milwaukee, Wis.; from there by the lettre de cachet route to St. Elizabeth; there regarded as insane, and his very statement of the facts taken as absolute proof of 'persecutory mania;' punished in the hospital for attempt to secure legal assistance for his release; his pension of $12 per month used by the hospital; his pension of $50 per month, for life, as an old employee of Arnold, Constable & Co., commuted and released by said relative for a cash payment, made to said relative, for $250; penniless and friendless, his prospect for escape from life imprisonment among the insane exceedingly small.

"But a warm-hearted, energetic woman believed his story and enlisted counsel in his behalf; for months an investigation carried on and story proven true; habeas corpus proceedings instituted and his commitment held unconstitutional and illegal by Justice Wright, who stated on the bench 'that one might as well argue that a policeman could be authorized to arrest a citizen, charge him with murder, pronounce him guilty, and hang him to a lamp post;' remanded for six days to give opportunity for the superintendent to have inquisition by due process of law into his sanity, and discharged from custody and from the hospital because of failure of the superintendent to institute such proceedings. Willis was a sane man held for nearly two years, discharged without one dollar of money and without decent clothing.

THE SHAFFER CASE.

"In the Shaffer case, it appears he was too religious to suit the taste of an official in the hospital ward at the Soldiers' Home, who commanded him to stop praying with the sick inmates whom he visited; his refusal occasioned his lettre de cachet to St. Elizabeth; there he showed no signs of insanity, but his requests for discharge were refused and his release by habeas corpus resisted. He is now at home in the Pennsylvania mountains leading a useful life and respected and beloved by his friends and relatives. He also escaped what promised to be a life term, as his case was said to be 'incurable' by the 'expert' in charge. He was assisted to his home by the board of charities. A $20 bill, sent him by a nephew to aid in securing his freedom, in a letter to St. Elizabeth, never reached him.

"These are exceptional cases, of course, but there appear to be others with similar ear marks.

"But how about those who remain—sane or insane?

"Crowded out of the better accommodations by the 'pay patients,' and District 'indigents'—many of whom appear to be wives and feeble relatives of nontaxpaying Government employees—these old soldiers and sailors, for whom the best things of the hospital were intended when it was established, must be content with inferior quarters and vastly inferior food.

THE ALLEGED BULL PEN.

"Most of them, some 500, are confined in what they have christened the 'bull pen,' officially known as 'Atkin's Hall,' under the care and supervision of a very young physician, of about six months' practice previous to his connection with the institution.

"The 'bull pen' is a triangular inclosure of about 3 acres, of which about one-half is occupied by buildings. It is surrounded by brick walls and high paling fences, through which the inmates can be seen tramping wearily back and forth like caged animals, or sitting listlessly awaiting the bell for meals. Some have been there for a decade or over. No occupation, nothing to divert or stimulate their minds, subject to being disciplined for infraction of rules which (although held to be insane), they are required to understand, remember, and obey.

"Forbidden the right to consult counsel, or to be examined by outside physicians; ragged, wretched, and forlorn; with no hope for release prior to the day when 'taps' for them shall sound, and, feet foremost, they may be borne to the dissecting room for the pathologist to carve and pickle and lecture over their still warm though lifeless remains.

"One old soldier stated 'that he was treated as well as any old dog shut up in a back yard, with water to drink and a tough chunk to gnaw on; if he did not attempt to dig out, or jump the fence, or howl at the moon, he was left alone and kept out of trouble; that he never got medicine unless he asked for it when constipated.'"

The following named have been elected officers of the Medico-Legal Society to serve for the ensuing year:

President, Robert Reyburn, M. D.; vice-president, W. D. Hughes, M. D.; secretary, Charles M. Emmons, M. D.; treasurer, C. B. Robinson, D. V. S.; attorney, Richard P. Evans; associate attorney, James E. Padgett.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that article and others induced me to introduce in this House on the 13th day of February last a bill which provided for the separation of the criminal insane from those who are not criminal. That bill upon its introduction went to the Committee on the Judiciary and has remained there every since. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without having it read, a copy of that bill. I desire also, Mr. Chairman, to insert in the RECORD, without consuming the time necessary to read them, an article from the Washington Times, under date of February 19, 1906, an article from the Washington Post, and an article from the Evening Star of the same date.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that he was going to put in the RECORD certain newspaper articles.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have asked permission to insert them in the RECORD without having them read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to that. I desire to have them read.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope the gentleman will not object, because it will consume every bit of my time if I have those articles read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman from Florida think that it is wise to assail a public institution by anonymous, irresponsible newspaper articles, without even giving the House an opportunity to know what they are?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not agree with the gentleman that the Washington Post, the Washington Times, and the Washington Star are either anonymous or irresponsible.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are certainly anonymous, because they are not editorial articles, as I understand it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They are articles appearing in the news columns, for which they vouch, and for which they are responsible. An action of libel would lie if they did not tell the truth.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman always assume to be true everything that he sees in the newspapers?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No more than I do what I hear politicians assert at various times.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose the gentleman, not being a politician, of course is not a good judge of what politicians say!

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think I am a pretty fair judge of politicians. The gentleman has objected. I do not want him to take up all my time, making a speech about it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw my objection. We will see what these articles are.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Florida will be granted.

There was no objection.

The bill and newspaper articles referred to are as follows:

A bill to remove criminal insane from the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the approval of this act no person charged with offense against the United States who shall set up and allege insanity, or become and be insane pending trial therefor, and no person who shall have been convicted of any offense in a court of the United States, and who shall, while imprisoned under such conviction in any prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory, or of the United States, become and be insane, shall be committed in or transferred to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That within sixty days from and after the approval of this act all such persons named in the preceding section charged with crime and subject to be indicted and tried therefor, or convicted of crime and undergoing sentence therefor, who shall be inmates of and confined in the said Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia under any transfer or commitment by any authority whatsoever, shall be removed therefrom and transferred to an insane asylum in any State or Territory where there are accommodations for the separate care, custody, and treatment of the criminal insane, to be selected and designated by the Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 3. That upon application of the Attorney-General of the United States the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove and transfer the said insane persons under criminal charge or conviction, as aforesaid, from the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia to any insane asylum in any State or Territory that shall be designated by the Attorney-General for their commitment and custody.

SEC. 4. That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to contract with any State or Territory insane or lunatic asylum for the care, custody, and treatment of such insane persons, while remaining so insane and until their removal or discharge, in such amounts as he may deem just and reasonable.

SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and report to the Congress the cost of erection and maintenance of a separate pavilion for the care, custody, and treatment of said insane persons, convicted of or charged with offenses against the United States, at the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, or elsewhere outside of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That the necessary money required to effect the purpose of this act is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, out of any money not otherwise appropriated by existing law.

SEC. 7. That all law and parts of law inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

DOCTOR WHITE DENIES ABUSE OF INSANE—DECLARES ST. ELIZABETH INMATES WELL TREATED—SAYS HE HAS NOT SEEN ANY BRUTALITY IN FOURTEEN YEARS.

Smarting deeply under the charges made in the report by a committee of the Medico-Legal Society of the District, as published exclusively in yesterday's Times, that inmates of the St. Elizabeth's Asylum were made to suffer indignities and abuses by the physicians and attendants there. Dr. William A. White, superintendent of the institution, emphatically declares that such is not the case in that institution, and furthermore would not be tolerated if they were known to exist.

PATIENTS OFTEN ASSAULT DOCTORS.

"If the truth be known," declared Doctor White to-day, "more physicians in insane asylums and hospitals are assaulted by patients than patients are ever assaulted by physicians. I have been fourteen years connected with institutions of this kind and during this time have never known of a case of brutality to a patient by a physician in charge, but have known many cases in which physicians have been assaulted by crazed patients."

Doctor White also denies the statement made in the Medico-Legal Society's report to the effect that warm bodies were ever dissected or that insane criminals are housed indiscriminately with other inmates of the asylum.

CRIMINALS KEPT SEPARATE.

"These two statements," declared Doctor White, "are without foundation. As to our housing insane criminals among other inmates, I will state emphatically that such is not the case. We have a separate building for the criminal insane, provided some years ago by act of Congress, and in no other building are these patients put."

"Such reports as these," added Doctor White, "work incalculable harm, in that they reflect badly on an institution which, far from intending harm to patients, works untold relief and good to a community. Instead of establishing confidence in the authorities of this institution, as we are striving to do, it spreads alarm among people who have friends or relatives, the belief entering their minds that patients are subjected to harsh treatment. Furthermore, we maintain no secrecy here, as has been stated, but, on the other hand, our methods are open to investigation by anyone who cares to visit the institution."

INVESTIGATION PROBABLE.

Further than this, Doctor White declined to be quoted, stating that he would leave this to the action of the board of visitors of the asylum, which would, he said, in all probability make a thorough investigation of the charges.

With this purpose in view, the board of visitors, composed of Dr. F. N. Gunnell, ex-Surgeon-General United States Navy; William A. Maury; Mrs. A. M. Gangewer; Surgeon-General Walter Wyman, of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service; Brig. Gen. John Moore; S. H. Kauffmann; Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin; Dr. G. L. Magruder, and Mrs. Gardiner Hubbard, will meet in the office of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to discuss their probable action with reference to the alleged harsh methods in vogue at the asylum.

[Washington Post, February 19, 1906.]

INSANE ASYLUM ABUSES.

Strait-jackets and handcuffs are in frequent use.

The "feeding tube" has been upon occasions thrust through the nostril down the throat as a method of discipline as well as of alleged necessity.

"Wringing out" by wet towels and "toweling" with dry towels placed upon the prisoner's neck and twisted from behind until the patient falls over semiconscious (sometimes with soap in the mouth) is not an uncommon practice.

The "saddle" has been used at times, a contrivance upon which refractory patients are said to be placed in a reclining position, fastened hand, foot, and neck, so that no movement is possible except to roll the eyes around a circumscribed area of the ceiling, and thus left for hours.

Kicking and cuffing by attendants for failure to obey orders, or do work properly, or for "taking an extra spoonful of beans" at table is alleged.

An incident is told of an attendant, disturbed at night by a somnambulistic patient, striking him on the mouth and knocking him down, and carrying his own hand in a bandage for several days in consequence, and of another attendant breaking a patient's leg in disciplining him.

A like proportion of autopsies—114 out of 236 deaths—occurring in our city hospitals would necessitate a large staff of deputy coroners, especially if dissections were commenced "within three hours after death, while the body is still warm, "as has been authoritatively stated is done at St. Elizabeth.

The dead seem to be excellently well cared for with newest scientific appliances by the medical staff and "internes."

But how about the living insane?

WHAT THE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS.

The committee recommends that the Medico-Legal Society take action with the view of securing legislation to effect the following objects:

First. That the insane criminals and those charged with crime be transferred elsewhere for custody and treatment, and that further commitments of the criminal insane in St. Elizabeth be prohibited.

Second. That the patients in St. Elizabeth shall have the personal service and attention of an experienced and expert alienist as a medical director, who shall not be charged with administrative details of buildings, finances, etc.

Third. That an effective system of inspection of conditions and methods prevailing in the Government Hospital for the Insane in this District (and all other similar institutions), and for an auditing of the expenditures and accounts thereof, by officials independent of and unconnected with said hospital, be provided.

Fourth. That provision be made for an inquisition by a jury into sanity of all ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines transferred from National Soldiers' Homes to St. Elizabeth after thirty days from and after their commitment therein, upon request, in writing, of such patient or of his friends or attorney, filed with the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and within five days after the filing of such request.

Fifth. That no distinction of accommodations and food shall be permitted among the male patients in St. Elizabeth, civil or military, and that their food shall be in every respect equal to that enjoyed by the attendants.

Sixth. That a hospital be established under separate control for reception and treatment of cases of inebriety and the drug habit before commitment to St. Elizabeth, and that no commitments of patients suffering from such causes shall be for a longer continuous period than six months.

Seventh. That an institution for the care and education of feeble-minded children of the District of Columbia, now sent elsewhere at great expense, be established in this District.

Eighth. That the pension money of all ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines be not chargeable for any board or maintenance on account of their treatment and confinement in St. Elizabeth, but that such pension shall be held for their benefit in the same manner as now held by the Soldiers' Homes.

Ninth. That no fees or commissions shall be allowed or paid out of any pension money to any committee or guardian of any pensioner while he shall remain an inmate of said hospital for any alleged services rendered as such committee or guardian, nor any fees be paid to physicians or others connected with said hospital for testifying on question of such pensioner's sanity.

Tenth. That the maximum per capita cost of maintenance of a District patient in St. Elizabeth shall not exceed $190 per annum, so long as the total number of patients in the hospital shall be in excess of 1,500.

Eleventh. That the confinement of persons against their will in said hospital, who have only some harmless hobby, fad, or fancy not dangerous to themselves or others, and who are able to care for their own persons, shall be prohibited.

Twelfth. That measures be effected for the separation of the patients into classes on the cottage or colony plan, and to the adoption of the best and most advanced methods of care and treatment of the insane in St. Elizabeth; that patients suffering from tuberculosis be colonized on part of the farm lands of the hospital and given benefit of open-air methods of treatment.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES M. EMMONS, M. D., Secretary,
RICHARD P. EVANS, Attorney,
Committee.

[Washington Star, February 19, 1906.]

BOARD TAKES ACTION—RECOGNITION OF CHARGES AGAINST ST. ELIZABETH'S MANAGEMENT—HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE—SERIOUS ALLEGATIONS BY THE MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY OF WASHINGTON—NUMBER OF RECOMMENDATIONS—GROSS ABUSE CHARGED, WHICH THE COMMITTEE IN ITS REPORT SAYS SHOULD BE REMEDIED.

A meeting of the official board of visitors to the Government Hospital for the Insane is being held this afternoon to consider serious charges that have been made against that institution by a committee of the Medico-Legal Society, composed of Dr. Charles M. Emmons and Richard P. Evans, an attorney.

Owing to the unavoidable detention of two of the members of the board, it was more than an hour late in getting together, the time originally set being 2 o'clock.

The meeting is being held in the rooms of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission on H street, near the Cosmos Club house. The call for the assembling of the board was issued this forenoon by Dr. William A. White, superintendent of the hospital, who is also secretary of the board of visitors.

The visitors are appointed by the President and are supposed to represent the different elements comprising the inmates of the institution. Thus the board has as members Dr. F. M. Gunnell, surgeon-general of the Navy (retired), representing the sailor inmates; Gen. John Moore, surgeon-general of the Army (retired), representing the soldier inmates; Gen. Walter Wyman, surgeon-general of the Marine-Hospital Service, representing the merchant sailors; Dr. G. L. Magruder, a lay physician; Mr. S. H. Kauffmann, representing the indigent insane of the District of Columbia; Judge W. A. Maury, of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, who is the legal member of the board; Rev. Tennis S. Hamlin, Mrs. A. M. Gangewer, and Mrs. Gardiner G. Hubbard.

WHAT THE BOARD WILL CONSIDER.

The main duties of the board are to investigate allegations made against the hospital; to make official visits to the institution every month; to audit the accounts of Doctor White, and to hold meetings twice every year.

At the meeting in progress to-day the board will take up all the charges made by the Medico-Legal Society, which embrace allegations that strait-jackets, handcuffs, etc., are in frequent use; that the "feeding tube" has been upon occasions thrust through the nostril down the throat as a method of punishment and discipline as well as of alleged necessity. Many other like occurrences are reported. The committee say it has no idea that these practices, if they exist, are known or permitted by the superintendent, but he has to leave all details of care and treatment to his subordinates. The committee state that all criminals under charge or sentence should be transferred elsewhere, and that the conditions surrounding many of the ex-soldiers and sailors confined in St. Elizabeth's reflects no credit upon either the hospital authorities or the Government.

Reference is made to the "bull pen," where, it is said, some 500 are confined, the management of which the committee condemns. As to medical treatment these old soldiers receive, the report says there appears to be no information obtainable from the reports, judging from those examined under authority of court.

The committee refers to the report of the superintendent of the hospital regarding autopsies, and makes this comment:

"A like proportion of autopsies (114 out of 236 deaths) occurring in our city hospitals would necessitate a large staff of deputy coroners, especially if dissections were commenced 'within three hours after death, while the body was still warm,' as has been authoritatively stated is done at St. Elizabeth's."

STATEMENT BY DOCTOR WHITE.

When Doctor White was seen by a Star reporter to-day he said he would not attempt to make specific denial of the several allegations, as the entire matter would be thoroughly gone over by the board of visitors at its meeting this afternoon. Doctor White said the investigators of the Medico-Legal Society wanted to examine certain records and patients. Permission to do this was refused them, Doctor White added, because the records of certain of the patients are in no sense public records. For instance, there are many persons whose mothers, fathers, wives, and other relatives are patients at the institution, and they would not like to have their sad and unfortunate condition exploited in any manner whatever.

"There are more than 3,000 patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane," said Doctor White, "and I can say without fear of contradiction that there are fewer cases of disorder and maltreatment in this community of the insane than there is in the average town of an equal number of sane persons. The unpardonable sin in this institution is the ill treatment of patients by attendants or other employees.

Any employee, even though he be a member of my official staff, who maltreats one of the unfortunates under his care or condones such an offense will be instantly dismissed by me."

Doctor White said considerably more injuries, and frequently serious ones, were inflicted on attendants by the insane patients than vice versa. He had several times procured the arrest of attendants for striking or otherwise injuring the insane under their charge, and their dismissal from the institution was, of course, a foregone conclusion.

HAS NEVER TOLERATED ABUSE.

"I will not tolerate the abuse of the unfortunate people under my care," said Doctor White emphatically, "and I have never done so. When such cases are brought to my attention I act decisively. But I can not be expected to know of every detail of all these buildings and their thousands of inmates. I must trust some of these to my assistants. As it is, I am governor, pooh-bah, mayor, financier, and everything else here.

"The committee of the Medico-Legal Society has recommended that the executive management of the institution should be separated from the professional department," said the reporter.

"The proposed separation of the alienist from the administrative branch," replied Doctor White, "would simply be impracticable. It has been tried elsewhere and has proved to be a failure. Its trial is in the nature of ancient history. It is necessary to have an alienist in charge of the administration of such an establishment as this in order to determine what is needed, both as to materials and measures. You would not place a paper hanger in charge of a machine shop, would you?"

HIS CONSCIENCE CLEAR.

The superintendent declared that the charges that have been made against the institution do not disturb him, as his conscience is clear as to its management, so far as he is concerned. He said abuse has become one of the perquisites of the office, which a noted French writer has referred to as martyrdom. It is Doctor White's opinion that an institution such as the Government Hospital for the Insane should enjoy the fullest confidence of the public, otherwise its confidence is weakened. It appears to him, he said, that the Medico-Legal Society is striving to destroy this confidence.

ALLEGED BULL PEN.

Referring to the allegations made against the so-called "bull pen," Doctor White said it was simply an inclosure in which provisional liberty was given to those of the patients who can not be trusted in the open grounds of the hospital, because they might wander away, climb over the walls, get run over on the railroad tracks, or injure themselves by falling with attacks of epileptic fits.

"There are no high and gloomy walls about the so-called 'bull pen,' as has been stated, but the buildings occupied by the epileptics and others who can not be trusted in the open are surrounded by ornamental paling fences not more than 5 feet high, and in the inclosure are fountains, flowers, settees, etc.

"It is a question of allowing the unfortunates I have described to have daily walks and fresh air in this inclosure or else keep them confined indoors. The criminal insane are not confined with these in the misnamed 'bull pen,' but are segregated in the building known as 'Howard Hall,' where they are kept in confinement."

In conclusion Doctor White said he would welcome the investigation, as he declared he had nothing to fear.

COMMISSIONER MACFARLAND'S COMMENT.

In commenting this morning on the report made by the Medico-Legal Society on the Government Hospital for the Insane, Commissioner Macfarland said:

"The Commissioners, of course, have nothing to do with the administration of the Government Hospital for the Insane, which is under the supervision of the Interior Department and of a board of visitors appointed by the National Government. Our relation to the institution is confined to sending indigent District patients there under the act of Congress, and at a certain per capita charged. However, our board of charities has been considering for some time, at my instance, the question as to whether it would not be better to have a separate institution for the District insane, and also provision for epileptics and the feebleminded of, and similar classes not now adequately provided for, and also the question as to the cost of caring for our patients at the Government Hospital for the Insane. No conclusion has yet been reached. The question of the manner of commitment of District patients is under consideration in the committees of Congress."

DECLINES TO TALK.

United States District Attorney Daniel W. Baker to-day declined to make any statement in reference to the disclosures respecting the alleged improper condition of affairs at the Government Hospital for the Insane. Mr. Baker said that he knew nothing about the matter except from published accounts.

SUMMARY OF THE CHARGES.

After disclaiming any intention of reflecting on the ability of Dr. William A. White, the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, as an alienist or on his personal integrity, the committee makes allegations of which the following is a summary:

That strait-jackets and handcuffs are frequently used on patients; that a contrivance called a saddle, upon which patients are bound hand, foot, and neck, in a reclining position, and in such position that they are unable to move, is frequently used, in which condition patients are frequently left for several hours at a time; that tubes have been frequently thrust from the nostrils into the mouth of patients, and they have been fed in this way, both, it was said, as a matter of necessity and for purpose of discipline; that it is not an uncommon practice to fasten towels, both wet and dry, about the neck of a patient and to twist them from behind until the patient falls in a semiconscious condition; that soap is often placed in the mouth of patients; that kicking and cuffing of the inmates are not at all uncommon, and that it is done for very minor offenses, an incident being that an attendant knocked a patient down, and injuring his own hand in consequence, for the reason, alleged, that the patient disturbed his sleep. Another attendant, it is charged, broke the leg of a patient in an effort to discipline him.

THE RECOMMENDATIONS.

"The committee recommends that the Medico-Legal Society take action with the view of securing legislation to effect the following objects:

"First. That the insane criminals and those charged with crime be transferred elsewhere for custody and treatment, and that further commitments of the criminal insane in St. Elizabeth be prohibited.

"Second. That the patients in St. Elizabeth shall have the personal service and attention of an experienced and expert alienist as a medical director, who shall not be charged with administrative details of buildings, finances, etc.

"Third. That an effective system of inspection of conditions and methods prevailing in the Government Hospital for the Insane in this District (and all other similar institutions) and for an auditing of the expenditures and accounts thereof, by officials independent of and unconnected with said hospital, be provided.

"Fourth. That provision be made for an inquisition by a jury into sanity of all ex soldiers, sailors, and marines transferred from Soldiers' Homes to St. Elizabeth after thirty days from and after their commitment therein, upon request, in writing, of such patient or of his friends or attorney, filed with the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and within five days after the filing of such request.

"Fifth. That no distinction of accommodations and food shall be permitted among the male patients in St. Elizabeth, civil or military, and that their food shall be in every respect equal to that enjoyed by the attendants.

"Sixth. That a hospital be established under separate control for reception and treatment of cases of inebriety and the drug habit before commitment to St. Elizabeth; and that no commitments of patients suffering from such causes shall be for a longer continuous period than six months.

"Seventh. That an institution for the care and education of feebleminded children of the District of Columbia, now sent elsewhere at great expense, be established in this District.

REGARDING PENSION MONEY.

"Eighth. That the pension money of all ex soldiers, sailors, and marines be not chargeable for any board or maintenance on account of their treatment and confinement in St. Elizabeth, but that such pension shall be held for their benefit in the same manner as now held by the Soldiers' Homes.

"Ninth. That no fees or commissions shall be allowed or paid out of any pension money to any committee or guardian of any pensioner while he shall remain an inmate of said hospital for any alleged services rendered as such committee or guardian; nor any fees be paid to physicians or others connected with said hospital for testifying on question of such pensioner's sanity.

"Tenth. That the maximum per capita cost of maintenance of a District patient in St. Elizabeth shall not exceed $190 per annum, so long as the total number of patients in the hospital shall be in excess of 1,500.

"Eleventh. That the confinement of persons against their will in said hospital, who have only some harmless hobby, fad, or fancy, not dangerous to themselves or others, and who are able to care for their own persons, shall be prohibited.

"Twelfth. That measures be effected for the separation of the patients into classes, on the cottage or colony plan, and to the adoption of the best and most advanced methods of care and treatment of the insane in St. Elizabeth. That patients suffering from tuberculosis be colonized on part of the farm lands of the hospital and given benefit of open-air methods of treatment.

"Respectfully submitted.

WE COURT INQUIRY OF ST. ELIZABETH'S: DOCTOR MAGRUDER—BOARD OF VISITORS PLANS PUBLIC INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES—PATIENTS WELL TREATED—USE OF HANDCUFFS AND STRAIT-JACKETS VIGOROUSLY DENIED.

"A wide investigation into the charges of cruelty to patients at St. Elizabeth's Asylum made by the Medico-Legal Society will be at once started by the board of visitors of the institution."

Dr. G. Lloyd Magruder, a member of the board of visitors, made this statement following a meeting of the board:

INVESTIGATION IS COURTED.

"Not only do we court a most thorough sifting of the charges," declared Doctor Magruder, "but we shall insist upon the appearance and testimony of the persons who have been responsible for them. The investigation will be open to the public, and the board will welcome the appearance of anyone who can put us into possession of existing abuses at St. Elizabeth's.

"This investigation will be conducted on lines similar to that of some two years ago, when certain irresponsible charges were made regarding the alleged unwholesome character of the beef served to patients. These charges created a considerable stir at the time, but when sifted to the bottom by the board were found to be without truth.

"The board of visitors pays frequent visits to the institution and, without exception, have always found every detail there in perfect condition. The asylum may be regarded as a model one, and one in which the managers take great pride. As to Doctor White, the board considers him one of the most capable alienists engaged in the care of the insane to-day. His long association in this work and his successful handling of nearly 3,000 patients bears out this statement perfectly.

DENIES USE OF HANDCUFFS.

"The assertion that strait-jackets and handcuffs are in constant use is, I believe, without any semblance of truth. Two years ago the board issued a general order forbidding the use of any undue restraint in connection with handling patients, and since then I have reason to know the order has been faithfully observed.

"Another statement which deserves condemnation is that vicious criminal insane are confined with those only mildly affected. This charge is without foundation. If it were so, it would be cruel and unjust, and public disapproval would put a stop to the practice at once. The fact is that the asylum is equipped with a substantial building set apart for the criminal insane alone. When the time comes that the present building is inadequate, another will be asked for."

Doctor Magruder followed this statement by saying that it seemed somewhat unusual that charges of such a serious nature as those brought by the Medico-Legal Society against the asylum management were not first brought to the attention of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hitchcock instead of being made public through the press.

Doctor Gunnell, president of the board, stated also that a thorough investigation of the charges would be insisted upon. He declared that the board of visitors wished for nothing more than to know the truth.

INQUIRY WILL BE THOROUGH.

"Charges of this nature," he said, "although not infrequent at such institutions, where the management has to deal with constant complaints, are most serious and will be thoroughly investigated, no matter whom they affect."

Dr. William White, superintendent in charge of the asylum, said he would be guided by the board's action. He had nothing to fear on the score of abuses to patients, he declared, and would welcome an investigation into the causes for the recent charges.

The work of the board of visitors will probably be protracted, and Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock may not be informed of their findings until some time next month. The grand jury may, in the meantime, have an investigation. It is not thought, however, that the board will be disposed to regard seriously the changes suggested by the Medico-Legal Society, particularly with reference to a separation of the criminal insane, in view of the fact that they are already separated.

[Washington Post, February 21, 1906.]

DOUBT ITS EFFICIENCY—INVESTIGATION BY ASYLUM BOARD IS QUESTIONED—NATURALLY WOULD FEEL TIMID—RICHARD P. EVANS, OF MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY COMMITTEE, THINKS CONGRESS OR SECRETARY OF INTERIOR SHOULD APPOINT BODY TO PROBE CHARGES—DOCTOR EMMONS CRITICISES METHODS OF TREATMENT.

The board of visitors of St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum is not the body to investigate the charges of cruelty and mismanagement set forth by the committee of the Medico-Legal Society, according to Richard P. Evans and Dr. Charles M. Emmons, of that committee.

"This board is responsible for everything that goes wrong, and naturally would feel timid about probing too closely," said Mr. Evans. "Doctor White, the superintendent of the hospital, is secretary of the board. Doctor Hamlin, a member of the board, secured commitments for certain patients at the institution and he probably has a temerity about investigating.

"In my opinion, the board of visitors should suggest that a committee of Congress, or a committee acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, should investigate the conditions at the insane asylum.

FIND THINGS IN GOOD SHAPE.

"The board makes monthly visits to the asylum and always finds things in tiptop shape. The members go there at a certain hour, and, I am told, that just before they arrive there is a great amount of scrubbing and house cleaning. They look through the buildings, enjoy a luncheon in the superintendent's office, and—how should they know anything about the hazing of defenseless imbeciles by the attendants? This cruelty is not done publicly.

"I have the greatest respect for Doctor White, and believe he is capable, but I don't think he knows anything about raising pigs and running farms. I think he has much knowledge as to the treatment of insane patients, and am sure that if more of it were used there would be greater benefits. His report shows that a great deal of building improvement has been done, but it does not show what new methods have been adopted for the treatment of the insane. Doctor White says the so-called 'bull pen' is a breathing spot for patients. There are several hundred acres of ground at the institution, and the patients should be given larger breathing space than an acre and a half, where from 300 to 500 are crowded together."

MOST EXPENSIVE INSTITUTION.

To the committee's report, which is being printed and will be transmitted to the board of visitors, the Secretary of the Interior, and others interested, has been appended a statement showing that St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum is the most expensive of eighty-odd large institutions in the United States, and that the methods of treating the patients are harsher. The institution on Blackwells Island, New York, where there are a thousand more patients, is conducted on more economical plans, says Doctor Emmons.

Reports of superintendents of other insane asylums, says Mr. Evans, show that they have many new and effective methods of treating patients. "Patients are kept apart as much as possible," he said, "because insanity has a tendency to spread. The indigent and feebleminded are not kept with the criminal insane. Female attendants have been employed to care for the most violent patients. A cross word or an unkind look, it has been shown, serves to undo much that has been accomplished with a person who is insane.

SELDOM SEEN BY PATIENTS.

"Doctor White, of course, does not know of the hazing of his patients, because the victims are afraid to tell him, and the cruel attendants certainly are not going to do so. I am told he is rarely seen by the patients, as he goes through the wards so seldom that many do not know him when they see him. His predecessor could be looked for any hour in the day or night, coming from some side door, stairway, basement, or any unexpected place, and he generally knew what was going on.

"Attendants of insane patients have a great deal to contend with, I know, and as they are only mortal, they are sometimes to be excused for giving vent to their torment; but poor, irresponsible insane persons should not be compelled to suffer. Only the rules prohibiting cruelty to patients stand between the attendants and the patients, and I am told there have been many vile assaults, which, of course, will never come to light. Conditions should be changed so as to remedy this untoward situation."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman who is entitled to the floor if he will not yield to me to move that the committee rise for the purpose of considering the resolution that came from the Senate a few moments ago for the relief of the people of San Francisco and the Pacific coast?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. With pleasure.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had under consideration the bill H. R. 18198—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DISASTER.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution that came a few moments ago from the Senate in relation to the relief of the sufferers of California, and move, first, to strike out the preamble to the resolution, and then will offer the following as a substitute for the entire resolution of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent at this time to take up the Senate joint resolution indicated for the purpose of considering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will omit the reading of the Senate resolution and report the amendment by way of a substitute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. I do not know what amount the Senate amendment provides. I suggest that at least it be read or that somebody state its provisions.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can state in a moment what the Senate resolution provides. The Senate resolution recites the terrible catastrophe——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that; but what is the provision of the resolution?

Mr. TAWNEY. The resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to expend $500,000, or appropriates $500,000, to be expended by the Secretary of War in rendering aid and assistance to the people on the Pacific coast who have been afflicted by this terrible calamity.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, how much is provided for in the resolution you propose?

Mr. TAWNEY. The resolution of the Senate, in the first place, is not as broad as the resolution which we passed here last evening.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does it contain any more money?

Mr. TAWNEY. It contains less money, in fact. We placed all resources of the Government under the control of three Secretaries on the Pacific coast, and made them available for this relief. Now we propose to increase the appropriation carried by the Senate resolution—five hundred thousand—to a million dollars, to be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion. The substitute resolution which I offer also requires the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to cooperate with the Secretary of War in rendering assistance to the people of that locality who have been damaged by reason of this earthquake and fire.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why I made the inquiry was just simply to find out how much money we are giving.

Mr. TAWNEY. We appropriate by this substitute resolution for the immediate relief of the people of San Francisco and neighboring cities a million dollars to be expended by the Secretary of War, under his direction and in his discretion, and in addition to that it requires the cooperation of three other distinct branches of the Government in rendering assistance to these people. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries was in the committee room a few moments ago, and informed me that if authority were given the Albatross, a large vessel, which is now within 7 miles of San Francisco, can be utilized immediately, and so can some of the vessels of the Navy and vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service. Under the Senate resolution none of these would be available. It is for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the relief by giving authority to a greater number of the Departments of the Government to act with the Secretary of War and to increase the appropriation that we propose this substitute for the Senate resolution.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in the presence of this tragic calamity this is a time for speedy action and not speeches. We ought to pass the resolution for succor and relief right away. If anything is going to be done for the aid of these unfortunate people it ought to be done now, and quickly done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the Senate resolution, and reading the proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster.

Amend by striking out the preamble and striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to procure, in open market or otherwise, subsistence and quartermaster's supplies, in addition to such supplies belonging to the military establishment and available, and issue the same to such destitute persons who have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the earthquake which occurred April 18, and the pending conflagration, and in executing this joint resolution the Secretary of War is directed to cooperate with the authorities of the State of California and the mayors of the cities of San Francisco, Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda, and such other cities on the Pacific coast as may have sustained damage.

"Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Commerce and Labor are hereby directed to cooperate with the Secretary of War in extending relief and assistance to these stricken people herein referred to, to the extent of the use of the naval vessels, revenue cutters, and other vessels, and Government supplies under their control on the Pacific coast.

"Be it further resolved, That to enable the Secretary of War to execute the provisions of this joint resolution there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended under the direction and under the discretion of the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading.

The amendment striking out the preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to amend the title by striking out the title of the Senate joint resolution and inserting the following:

Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, the House again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am very much obliged. Now, Mr. Chairman, after these articles appeared in these three newspapers, which I consider to be responsible, I introduced in this House a resolution on February 21, one and two days after these articles appeared, asking for the appointment of a congressional committee to investigate these charges. That resolution went to the Committee on Rules where it has quietly slept ever since. Now, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that when charges of this nature against the management of a public institution are made, it is not only the privilege, but the solemn sworn duty of Congress to investigate. Here we are appropriating thousands of dollars, aye, sir, up into the millions, to care for this institution, and appropriating the money properly; because if there is any class of our fellow-citizens upon the earth deserving our very best care, deserving of our every consideration, deserving of our most tender solicitude, it is this class who, unfortunately, have lost their reason.

In this asylum are three classes of people, the indigent insane of the District of Columbia, the insane soldiers and sailors of the United States, and the insane criminals from all over this country who raise and establish the plea of insanity in a Federal court. But, Mr. Chairman, although that resolution was introduced two months ago, it has quietly slept; and the Committee on Rules, the oligarchy of the American House of Representatives, has allowed it to sleep and has never taken one step to let the American people know whether these charges, involving the sacred honor of the American people, are true or not. They have allowed it to sleep there in the face of the fact that the charges have been made all over this country, and in the face of the further fact that they have been furnished with copies of ten sworn affidavits testifying to the truth of the charges. The committee was furnished with these ten copies of affidavits and advised that the originals would be forthcoming at any time when the committee might desire to have them.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the newspapers of the city of Washington have been filled for several days past with accounts of mismanagement and brutality at the St. Elizabeth Government Hospital for the Insane, located in the city of Washington; and

Whereas the Medico-Legal Society of the city of Washington has, through a duly appointed committee, published to the world a story of outrageous mismanagement of the affairs of said institution, and has also detailed to the public a story of brutalities perpetrated in said institution upon the helpless inmates; and

Whereas the American people are entitled to know the truth with regard to these charges: Therefore, be it

Resolved, First. That the Speaker of this House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of this body a committee of five with full power, and whose duty it shall be to make a full and complete examination of all the facts relating to the said charges, and report their findings and conclusions to this House.

Second. That the said special committee is fully empowered to send for persons and papers, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths, to take testimony and reduce the same to writing, and to employ such clerical and stenographical help as may be necessary.

Mr. Richard P. Evans, a member of the Washington bar, of good standing in his profession, and the attorney for the Medico-Legal Society, on the 12th day of the present month addressed a communication to the Committee on Rules, inclosing ten affidavits, each detailing acts of extreme cruelty and gross mismanagement at this institution. The communication of Mr. Evans and the affidavits, together with one or two more, I herewith submit:

1403 NEW YORK AVENUE NW.,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1906.

Honorable CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE ON RULES,
House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: In support of resolution No. 277, calling for an investigation by a committee of the House into the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane, introduced by Mr. CLARK of Florida February 21, 1906, and referred to your committee, I have the honor to file herewith copies of certain affidavits—ten in number—together with other papers and a copy of the report of the Medico-Legal Society of this city, the publication of which occasioned the introduction of said resolution.

I have other similar affidavits and statements now in my possession, and further corroborative testimony to same state of facts will be available at the proper time.

The allegations of abusive and brutal methods and of neglect and mismanagement contained in said affidavits are such as to demand an immediate, thorough, and impartial investigation in the interests of humanity, economy, and public confidence.

It is true that a bill (H. R. 15643) was introduced by a member of your committee, Mr. GROSVENOR, proposing to confer judicial powers upon the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane for the apparent purpose of this investigation, and that said bill was enacted by the House, with numerous amendments, on March 12, 1906, but that act now rests in a Senate committee, where the said board of visitors are endeavoring to have said amendments stricken out.

But the ladies and gentlemen composing said board of visitors hold offices of honor and confidence, with duties of efficient supervision of the affairs and management of said hospital, and the superintendent of the hospital is secretary of said board, and they are each individually responsible for all abuses of any duration, existence of faulty methods, and lack of efficient and economical administration of the hospital.

Consequently the secretary and each member of the board of visitors have a personal interest in the outcome of any inquiry into alleged abuses permitted or mismanagement occurring under their administration and supervision, and their verdict would necessarily reflect credit or discredit upon their own official acts.

As a matter of fact, no legislation was needed to empower the board of visitors of St. Elizabeth to investigate the affairs of that institution. Every book, paper, and record there has been subject to its inspection, and every official and employee at its beck and call; each individual patient and inmate could have been privately examined at any time by any member of the board; every meal could have been partaken of, every ward inspected without notice any hour of the day or night; every contract and expenditure inquired into. If sworn statements were desired, the board of visitors could have had special examiners of the Interior Department assigned to take testimony of employees and inmates, under oath. What the members of said board of visitors failed to do previous to the publication of the Medico-Legal Society report, they could have been doing every minute of the time since; but their efforts have apparently been misdirected to attempted investigation of the Medico-Legal Society; and I am informed that special examiners of the Interior Department have been secretly engaged in the endeavor to secure from former clients, in different States, some statements upon which to attempt to secure my disbarment from practice.

The superintendent, I am informed, has gathered up the straitjackets, etc., and deposited them in a room on "center," and has since said publication investigated the laundry upon charges filed some time prior thereto, and considerable improvement in conditions and attention is reported; but, so far as known, the board of visitors have remained quiescent.

At all events, the confidence of the public would be more pronounced in an investigation conducted by a committee of the House of Representatives, as provided in said resolution; such an investigation would be more thorough and productive of more beneficial and permanent results to the soldiers and sailors, and other inmates of St. Elizabeth (present and future), and of the citizens of this District than could be expected from an inquiry conducted by the board of visitors, hampered by personal feelings and prejudices and former friend by intimacy and confidential relations with officials of the hospital whose interests would be involved.

A careful consideration of the inclosures will disclose other important matters for inquiry and amendment, in addition to the main one of methods of discipline and restraint complained of. The present procedure of commitment of inmates of the National Soldiers' Homes, and disposition of their pension and other funds, and the antiquated and inadequate methods of finance and supervision—not materially changed since institution of the hospital in 1855, when growth to present proportions and responsibilities was not anticipated—seem to require remedial legislation.

Soliciting appropriate action by your committee, I am, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,
RICHARD P. EVANS,
Attorney at Law.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Before me, a notary public, in and for the District of Columbia, personally appeared Joseph A. Kinsey, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being first duly sworn according to law, on oath states:

That he is the same Joseph A. Kinsey who was an inmate of the Government Hospital for the Insane from about the 18th day of March, 1904, until on or about the 30th day of September, 1904; that he went there of his own free will for medical treatment, but what "treatment" he himself received, and he saw others receive, was such that he would in preference jump into the Potomac River rather than undergo such another experience. Chokings, blows, kicks, tying in bed, and threats, poor food and worse tobacco, inattention, and abuse was the daily experience of affiant and other patients on Gray Ash Ward. While on Oak Ward, then a hospital ward, he received kind treatment from the nurses, Miss McLaughlin and Miss Perry. They were good and sympathetic, and affiant and all other patients under their care and attention appreciated it very gratefully.

Affiant was choked by strangle hold around neck by Attendants Moffit, Tennyson, and Thrift; he was attacked by a patient while attendants were elsewhere, and had several ribs fractured on both sides; previous to that Tennyson kicked him in the ribs; affiant has seen said Tennyson, who is a big man, weighing over 200 pounds, jump on a patient's stomach with his knees; saw a patient on Oak Ward punched in stomach and wrung out (strangled) by an attendant; affiant was seldom without one or two black eyes, and they were not uncommon among other patients; on account of his appearance affiant's wife was frequently denied seeing him when she would call. A patient named Dodge was treated very badly; he afterwards died in the hospital, but from what cause affiant does not know; affiant has been told that said Dodge had a beautiful pair of black eyes when his wife received the body from St. Elizabeth.

Affiant noticed that patients who toadied to the attendants, did their work for them, and gave them no trouble, got along very nicely; but others, who required attention of the attendants, and were a little troublesome, were treated brutally; for instance, if a demented patient would want to walk he would be frequently grabbed, choked, and slammed in a chair, or thrown in a room; or a patient might wander from his particular ward hall into the reception hall, and he would be rushed by the attendants back into his hall with great violence, sometimes being thrown headlong on the floor; it was no place for the insane who needed attention, for they were treated like dogs by the attendants, who, for the most part, were lazy, heartless, and worthless. Patients were afraid to make complaints, for their goose would be cooked by the attendants if they did. Affiant was several times tied in bed without any reason; was willing to lie there; on one occasion he nearly strangled himself endeavoring to get loose. It is not a pleasant sensation to be tied down and left there, and feel your limbs getting numb, and no one pay any attention to you; that was affiant's and other patients' experience. There was no need for the rough and brutal treatment affiant experienced and frequently saw; kindness and patience upon part of the attendants would have left no occasion for it whatever; but no sane man would put up with such abuse without resenting it, and what could be expected of a man a little or a good deal off his head? They would be irritated into resistence, and then struck, choked, kicked, and otherwise punished. Doctor White never came through except on Sunday mornings, and then he would have other doctors with him and just go through formally.

Affiant has been working at his trade as a tailor ever since he left St. Elizabeth, and is so working now. That his residence is 468 K street SW.

JOSEPH A. KINSEY.

STATE OF OHIO,
County of Montgomery:

Personally appeared before me, in the county and State aforesaid, James L. Shaffer, aged 61 years, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he is the identical James L. Shaffer who was committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane upon an order signed by M. T. McMahon, president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, dated December 31, 1904, and held in said hospital for the insane until August 1, 1905, when he was discharged therefrom upon order of court in a habeas corpus proceeding; that during his confinement in said hospital he was not insane, but of good understanding, and that he fully comprehended all the circumstances and events coming under his observation during said period; that while in what is called "Atkins Hall"—or what the old soldiers there call the "bull pen"—he witnessed many acts of harsh and brutal treatment of the patients by the attendants; that he saw attendants choke patients into almost insensibility, grab them and throw them down on the hard floor, and kick and strike them; that he saw an attendant named Skinner assault an ex-soldier patient named Mike McKaskey at the dining table because he took a spoonful or so too many beans; this patient was not bright, but an inoffensive man; the attendant came up behind him and slapped him right and left on the cheeks, struck him in the side with his fists, and then grabbed him by the throat and pulled him over backwards, and dragged him out of the dining room into a side room, where, affiant was informed and believes, he beat him shamefully. There was an old man known as "Old Isaac" in Garfield basement; the attendants used to nag and make fun of him until they would get him in a rage, then abuse and misuse him; affiant saw an attendant named Groves standing over "Old Isaac" in a water-closet, kicking and stamping him, the old man screaming meanwhile.

These assaults were common, everyday occurrences, happening almost anywhere; they are against the rules and the doctors are supposed not to know of them, but they must certainly know and simply ignore and wink at them.

The surroundings were harsh and unpleasant, especially to anyone of a sensitive and decent nature; cursing and swearing by the attendants at the patients was common practice; food was of poor quality and poorly cooked. There was no "medical treatment" that he saw except physic or something of that kind was given when asked for by the patient. Eight or ten men were frequently compelled to bathe in one tub of water, which was obnoxious to affiant. There was nothing for affiant to do but sit around in the shade, watch the doctors and others play ball, etc.; nothing to employ the time in a beneficial way. So far as affiant saw, the superintendent, Doctor White, gave very little, if any, attention to the patients.

JAMES L. SHAFFER.

Deputy Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, Montgomery County, Ohio.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Before me, a notary public in and for said District, personally appeared Spencer Herbert, of said District, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being first duly sworn according to law, on oath states that for the two years next preceding about the 25th day of September, 1905, he was employed as a laundryman in the laundry building at St. Elizabeth; that he laundered a good many strait-jackets, which were made of heavy canvas such as he has seen boat sails made of, with heavy brass eyelets up the back to lace up like a woman's corset; that in August or September, 1905, he remembers distinctly that an attendant from Allison Building called for five or six strait-jackets, which he took with him; that affiant understood at the time that most of the consumptives were put in the Allison Building. During the summer of 1905 affiant saw patients in Howard Hall with strait-jackets on and also strapped in beds, and he also saw them with strait-jackets on in the Home Building No. 1. He saw two patients with strait-jackets there at one time; that affiant knows of one case of a negro, then in East Lodge, whenever he was taken out in the grounds for exercise had his hands fastened with leather handcuffs; that affiant saw an attendant in annex 1 (a hospital ward) hit a negro patient in the head with his keys, and it caused a lump about the size of an egg to rise upon his head; that when the doctor came through thirty minutes afterwards he saw the lump and inquired the cause of it, and the attendant told him that the patient was struck with a mopstick by another patient; affiant has seen attendants on a number of occasions wring patients out with towels in Dawes 2, in White Ash, and P Building; that in P Building he saw two attendants "wring" out a negro with a towel some time about the month of July, 1905, for about a half hour, from 7.30 to 8 o'clock p. m.; they would twist the towel about his neck until he would become unconscious, then wait until he would begin to recover consciousness, and then would wring him out again until his tongue would hang out; he was afterwards put in the strong room, this was to subdue him; affiant has seen patients in the laundry repeatedly struck by employees because they would not work fast enough; there was one patient named Bede who almost every day affiant saw kicked and struck alternately by employees; that on one occasion he saw an employee named Sidney run around with Bede on his shoulder and then drop him on the hard concrete floor; he remembers a patient named John Sheedy as being very much overworked and frequently struck by employees—it was really a sin the way these men were overworked and imposed upon; that a large part of the time the patients there were soaking wet from water and perspiration; that he has seen a female attendant beat a negro woman with her fists, this was during the summer of 1905; that affiant frequently heard the foreman of the laundry use profane language at the patients and others, and has frequently seen the said foreman, Manche, drunk while in the hospital grounds; that there were about seventeen male patients employed in the laundry most of the time while he was there and they worked harder than the regular employees, who, for the most part, acted as overseers and let the patients do most of the work. There were about twenty-five female patients in the laundry, about six male employees, and some forty girls. There were two girls kept to do the doctors' laundry, and one girl and a patient to do the special work for the bosses and officials; the servants of the doctors got their clothes laundered there.

The food was very poor and badly cooked; eggs were served about once a week, but were for the most part bad; the patients and employees in the laundry ate at the same table and had the same food and affiant has frequently left the table because of the odor of the bad eggs when broken.

That the machinery in the laundry was more than sufficient for the work before the purchase of new machinery last summer, which had not been used when affiant left, which he did because of the bad food and poor pay he was receiving.

That his residence is 916 Third street SE., in this city.

SPENCER HERBERT.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said District, Patrick O'Connor, aged 38 years, a resident of said District now and for twenty years last past, who, being duly sworn according to law, on oath says: That he has been employed in the Government Hospital for the Insane (St. Elizabeth) for about thirteen years—about five years as a fireman in the boiler house, about one year in the general kitchen, and about seven years on the wards as an attendant; that he has also been employed as a daily hand for some eight months prior to about the 1st day of January, 1906; that he was an attendant in Howard Hall for about five years, and witnessed many acts of brutality of the attendants to the patients; that he saw patients choked and struck and kicked by the attendants, ribs broken, heads cut open, eyes blackened, and the patients otherwise bruised and injured by being violently thrown down on the floor and jumped on with the attendants' knees. Wet towels were thrown about their necks and twisted until they would fall unconscious. These things were of daily occurrence. Shaving and bath days were the worst, the patients objecting being brutally choked and punished. Sometimes as many as six patients would be bathed in the same tub of water. That false reports would be made of these injuries by the head attendants, ascribing them to accident or attacks of other patients. He has seen patients so hurt by the attendants dragged down in the cellar and kept there until after the doctor had passed through. Patients were strapped, tied down, put in bed saddles, etc., at the whim of the attendants frequently, not to be troubled with them or to "get even with them" for complaining, or something of that sort. Of course, they would report that the patient was violent or dangerous.

There was some bad cases among the criminals, but in affiant's opinion this violent and brutal treatment was unnecessary, and, in fact, did great harm to the patients' mental condition in many instances.

There was no separation of the different classes of the insane—the mild cases mixed with the violent. The courtyard in center of Howard Hall was only airing place they had, and it was awful there in hot weather. A number of the criminal insane were worked outside among the other insane patients. Old soldiers were taken from other buildings to Howard Hall for punishment for infraction of rules or displeasing the doctors.

When the board of visitors would go through patients who wanted to speak to them and complain of their treatment were kept back by the guards. This was under Doctor Richardson's administration, but the board of visitors were practically the same as now. In West Lodge and West Lodge 2 the treatment of the patients was practically the same. Wringing out with wet towels was common. In White Ash ward he recollects twelve patients "strapped" at one time in straw beds, all in a line. Strait-jackets were frequently in use. In affiant's opinion this was largely for the convenience of the attendants, to save them trouble of watching and attending to them. On board visiting days the patients that were bruised or ragged and unclean looking were hustled out of sight; down to the woods, or anywhere out of sight. The best looking among the patients were kept on exhibition for the board of visitors.

While acting as fireman he saw the patients worked very hard hauling coal and ashes. In affiant's opinion they were overworked.

In affiant's opinion, if there were more attendants and they had less hours of work, much of the rough treatment of the patients would be done away with.

That his observation and information makes him believe conditions are no better now under Doctor White than formerly, unless very recently improved.

That in last December, a little before Christmas, he saw an attendant or keeper go to a patient who was singing, or rather "crooning," tell him to shut up, and then put his arm around his neck and cut his wind off and dropped him on the ground, where he lay some time before he got up. That during his last service there affiant filed a written complaint with Doctor White about a foreman, Adams Foremour, who sent affiant to his own house to do work there—putting down carpet, move furniture—while he was on duty for the hospital and being so paid; and also for sending affiant four or five times out of the hospital grounds, during his working hours, for whisky, which he drank in the grounds; said foreman also sent Dan Connors and Ed Brooks out of the grounds after whisky; that affiant took the letter to Doctor White, and also explained the matter fully to him after he read the letter, but nothing was ever done with the foreman. That affiant informed Special Officer Clark that Government shoes and clothing were being sold by said foreman's brother to the workmen, and several discharges were made in consequence, but the said shoes and clothing were not taken back, and no one was prosecuted.

Affiant further states that on one occasion he washed the blood stains out of a wrapper or gown on the body of a colored woman after it had been dissected at the rest, and the body was still warm; he washed off the blood and put the body on a slab and placed the body in a cooling compartment. Doctor Blackburn was then in charge.

Personally appeared before me Thornton O. Pyles, residing in Washington, D. C., who, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that for about two years and a half next preceding May 30, 1904, he was employed as an attendant and nurse at the Government Hospital for the Insane (St. Elizabeth), being about one year under the present superintendent, Dr. William A. White; that he was previously a graduate of the Nurses' Training School at Norristown, Pa., and has a diploma; that he served as a nurse nearly four years in the Norristown State Insane Asylum, of Norristown, Pa.; that on account of his actively advocating better treatment and food and clothing for the inmates he was discharged about 30th day of May, 1904, his resignation having been requested twenty days previously for having taken active interest in bettering conditions among patients and employees and writing articles for newspapers; that he has in his possession a petition or protest, which was signed by a number of the attendants and employees under Doctor White, setting forth serious grounds of complaint, which he will produce when called upon; that while acting as head attendant under Doctor White on "Garfield first" there was a scarcity of help, which he complained of, as accidents happened for that reason, and the help was poor and inexperienced in many cases; that his ward adjoined "Gray Ash," and that joined "Oak ward;" that in both of these wards he saw in frequent use the "bed saddle," straight jackets, and handcuffs, with heavy straps attached, and the feeding tube used in a rough manner, frequently without vaseline on it—merely dipped in pan of water; that he has seen towels thrown around patients' necks and twisted until their wind was cut off; that these appliances were used because of scarcity and inefficiency of help. The "bed saddle" referred to was an arrangement by which patient is laid on his back, his feet strapped to foot of the bed, his hands to sides of the bed, body fastened immovable, and the only motion possible being a movement of the head. That the food furnished was not as good in variety or preparation as he has seen and eaten in two almshouses, in one of which he has been employed and the other he frequently visited; and food was much better at Dixmont State Hospital, Pennsylvania. Many times there was a very insufficient amount of food sent to the patients in his ward, and he had frequently made complaint and procured more food, but other attendants preferred to let their patients go hungry than go to any trouble about it. That he has seen a great deal of teasing the patients and of rough usage and abuse on part of the young class of attendants. That there were a good many patients in Howard Hall who were not criminals. That the superintendent, Doctor White, would seldom visit these wards, and when he did do so would pass through hurriedly and would not stop to talk with or pay any attention to the patients.

That during the entire period of his service he only recollects the board of visitors going through the above-named wards two or three times. On "board days" notice would come around to clean up, and everything would be put in shipshape for the visitors.

That it was a common occurrence to hustle patients from Garfield first and second, White Ash, Dawes first, and Dawes second, who were poorly clad and not very presentable, out of the wards to the secluded part of the woods out of sight of the board of visitors; that there were a good many ex-soldiers among them. On board days the food was much better than at other times, but on the average it was very poor and poorly cooked. That at time of his discharge he was active in a union of the hospital attendants, which had occasioned an investigation by the board of visitors, and which resulted in a whitewash and affiant's discharge; that affiant was not called upon to testify, and was gotten rid of; and he is informed that the finest piece of corned beef procurable in market was exhibited before the board of visitors as a sample of that furnished the patients, and they accepted the same without further inquiry; that affiant made frequent complaints to Doctor White about the food and treatment of the patients; that the diet of different wards varies about as much as that of the Raleigh Hotel and a 3-cent lunch room.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, Mrs. Margaret Lochte, aged 37 years, who, being first duly sworn according to law, upon her oath states: That she was committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane (St. Elizabeth) in June, 1905; that she was never in court, but was adjudged insane in her absence; that she was discharged from said hospital on March 13, 1906, instant, upon sworn certificate of the superintendent, Dr. William A. White, that she was of sound mind.

Affiant further states that she saw frequent acts of ill-usage of patients by attendants while in said hospital; that she saw an attendant catch a Miss Ferber by the hair and drag her into a room; that she has seen a patient struck in the face and her eye blackened; that Miss Ferber was taken roughly from the table before she had finished her meal and locked up in a side room for no apparent good reason; that affiant has been "toweled" twice with wet towels thrown over her head and face and twisted or "wrung out" under her chin; that affiant was struck in the face with a stick by an attendant, whom she can identify, and one of her eyes injured so that Doctor Hough noticed it afterwards, and asked her the cause of it, and she told him, and the doctor told the attendant not to do so again, and had some private words with her that affiant did not overhear. That affiant is a Catholic, and a number of times asked for a priest, but no priest came, and she was told that the priest only visited the hospital once a year; that she was thus deprived of such consolation.

That affiant was unnecessarily fed with a feeding tube thrust down her throat when she was willing and able to eat; the nurse or attendant had told the doctor that affiant would not eat, and he ordered the feeding tube, and it was used on her, although she protested, and told the doctor that she was willing to eat, and asked him to try her. The food was coarse; she was compelled to wear woolen stockings and felt slippers in August; letters she wrote were not mailed, and she was annoyed and worried in other ways; that Doctor White never spoke to her, but when she left the hospital Doctor Clark asked her if she could forget everything that happened there. Affiant left hospital on parole about September 17, 1905; was finally discharged as above stated.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, Nannie H. Griffin, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that she is 30 years of age and resides in the District of Columbia; that her mother, Mrs. Cecelia J. Griffin, has been an inmate of St. Elizabeth since April 14, 1904; that affiant and her sister, Jennie H. Griffin, have made daily visits to their mother ever since her admission there; that they both saw her mother the day after her admission in Elm ward, center building, in a separate room; she had only her night dress on, and bare feet, with window open and cold air blowing in; that she had not been accustomed to such exposure; she was then walking about the room; for three weeks after that the doctor refused to let them see their mother, stating "it would be detrimental to her for them to see her;" that finally they absolutely insisted upon seeing her, and found her with three ribs broken, her throat and nose bruised and blackened, one side of her face badly swollen, and she had what they call a "rest sheet" on her; this "rest sheet" is made of heavy canvas, solid in front with heavy brass eyelet holes at the back, the eyelets being heavier than an ordinary finger ring; it is laced up the back like a corset with heavy cord and confines the arms; this was placed on next to the naked flesh, and she still has the marks of this "rest sheet" across her back; it extended to her knees and they were skinned and bruised from rubbing against it; this was early in May, 1904; her mother was then 65 years of age. Affiant could obtain no information as to how her mother's injuries were received. Doctor Clark stated the ribs were broken before she came there, but this was not true, and affiant has certificates of two physicians to disprove it.

That her mother cried and begged affiant and her sister to have the "rest sheet" removed, which they insisted upon having done, and they found the flesh all bruised and discolored from the eyelet rings and lacing. That they have never put that "rest sheet" on her mother since, but affiant has frequently seen it upon other patients. (That it seems impossible for a patient to release herself from the "rest sheet," but it is stated that a Mrs. Powers did so in a room when she was locked in and left to herself, and that she took out the lacing and hanged herself with it in January, 1905.) When the "rest sheet" was taken off affiant found her mother's ribs bandaged and plastered, and then, for first time, knew that her ribs were broken. Since then, on the 17th of January, 1906, her mother had her right hip fractured by falling on the polished slippery floor in the dormitory (tower No. 1), as affiant is informed, and is now suffering with the same. That there are about twenty-six patients in that ward, nearly all of them bed patients, and there is usually one nurse or attendant who has also at night to go upstairs to about fifteen or twenty patients there; of course she can not be in both places at once. Since her mother's leg was fractured there has been an additional nurse in care of her, and when that nurse leaves for supper, or other reason, it takes the regular ward nurse from the other patients. That patients are frequently tied in bed with "restraining sheets" twisted and fastened across the body so as to hold them in bed. All of this is due, in affiant's opinion, to lack of sufficient nurses and attendants. Many of these patients should be dressed and placed in chairs or permitted to walk about, but this would require the care of more nurses and attendants. These nurses or attendants have some fourteen hours or more service, and it is a hard task for them to give what attention they do.

About a month ago I found one of the patients had wriggled partly out of the restraining sheet and was hanging by the neck from the bed, strangling; her name was Doctor ———, a female physician; affiant screamed for help and the nurse heard her (in the dining room) and came to her assistance, and they released the patient and saved her from strangling. Affiant and her sister remain quite late at night, and are well acquainted with conditions; the food is very poor, heat badly regulated, and patients very poorly attended to, all due, in affiant's opinion, to poor management.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, Mervin A. Daddysman, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

That he was admitted to St. Elizabeth in February, 1905, and was released in July, 1905; that he was first placed in sick ward and remained there about two weeks, and received fair treatment from the female nurses there; that he was removed from there to "Sycamore," where, about a week after his transfer, he was seized by the throat by an attendant and choked, causing him to bite his tongue badly; that the attendant (whose name was George Wedon, affiant believes) told affiant to move his chair in which he was sitting, and as affiant started to do so—but not quickly enough to suit the attendant—the said attendant sprang upon him and choked him, cursing him at the same time. He then endeavored to take French leave, but was overtaken and brought back to the hospital, and placed in Gray Ash ward; here he saw daily abuse of patients; a favorite method of punishment was to put towels around patients' necks and twist them—"wring them out." It was called; this was a daily occurrence; an attendant named Fred and another whose name affiant does not know, were specially active in this toweling. A head attendant named Hogan was very abusive to the patients; said Hogan, on one occasion, told affiant to carry a large bundle of laundry to the laundry building; affiant was reading a paper and did not know he was addressing affiant, and said Hogan and said attendant Fred struck affiant in the jaw, beat him, kicked him in back and ribs and over kidneys, injured affiant's hand, and blacked his eyes. After being thoroughly beaten, affiant was compelled to take the laundry down to the building, and afterwards affiant was confined to bed for three days (without any medical attendance whatever) in consequence of said beating. Affiant's mother saw his swollen hand and blacked eyes, but affiant did not tell her the cause of it until after his release from the hospital, being afraid to do so. Affiant further states that he has seen other patients beaten in the same way he was and with as little reason; that he has seen them dragged from the table by the throat because they tried to get more food; frequently he did not get enough to eat, and what there was to eat was poor and badly cooked for the most part; that Hogan attempted to apologize for his attack upon affiant some time afterwards.

That he has seen several patients bathe in same tub of water; they ordered affiant to bathe in water after others, but affiant refused to do so; the patients generally appeared to be in constant state of apprehension and fear of the attendants.

That affiant had no medical attention, and the doctor rarely spoke to him, and gave little attention to any of them.

That affiant frequently asked to be allowed to work around, but this was refused; that he is now employed at his trade.

I, S. Dawes Shuster, state that I was taken to St. Elizabeth on about 18th of June, 1904; was declared insane by jury about June 27, 1904; was certified by superintendent as sane and decreed by court as sane and restored to civil rights January 5, 1906; that I was released on parole in November, 1905, I believe, through efforts of sister. Was sent there for neurasthenia; had been taking medicine for nervousness, etc. That I was in a very nervous, prostrated condition when sent to hospital and during my confinement there; I had been used to refined associations and good table and pleasant surroundings. In my sick and nervous condition I was peculiarly affected by rough and coarse manners and treatment. Cursing and rough commands to me and others from morning to night was the rule; all wards appeared to be about the same; not a word of sympathy or kindness from the attendants, but was kindly spoken to and treated by a nurse, Miss Martin, in B. B. building. I tried to treat the attendants in a gentlemanly way, but the attendants would "God damn me" and threaten to strike me, and on one occasion had it not been for a sailor in the ward (who afterwards said he would knock the attendant's head off if he struck me), I am sure I would have been assaulted by one of the attendants; he and his brother—who, I understand, has been discharged for some cause—were brutal, coarse, insulting, and abusive all the time; they kept me in a constant condition of fear and nervous apprehension. On one occasion I was sick and weak and a little slow in getting out of bed and said attendant caught me by the leg and dragged me partly out; I begged him to let me alone, but he said there was nothing the matter with me but "damned laziness" and I had to get out. While on "Oak ward" I saw said attendant's brother seize a patient by the throat and smash him up against the wall; they had told him to sit down, but he would get up and walk up and down, and this assault was to make him mind and keep quiet, I presume; also saw a patient grabbed at table by throat and legs by two attendants and dragged away; I did not see patient do anything out of the way and don't know reason for the assault. On one occasion an attendant in B. B. building heard a patient making exclamations, and he asked me. "What in hell was the matter with that man?" I told him that the patient had some hallucination of some one mistreating him; the attendant said, "Damn him, he'll have to cut that out;" he then entered the patient's room (his name was Ford) and closed the door—all but a crack, through which I heard a strangling, choking noise, as if the patient was being throttled; I told the supervisor, but he laughed me off and told me I ought to complain to the doctor. It was useless and dangerous to make complaints, as open threats were made as to what would be done with patients who complained. The food was unfit even for day laborers and awful for invalids; if it had been properly cooked it perhaps might have been passable.

I seldom saw an egg on table; we had oat meal without milk, except a few drops; frequently no milk at all; chicken was unknown, except occasionally a stew or for special diet, and this was on a hospital ward. The bathing was positively indecent to a man of any decency of habit or feeling.

There should be more attendants and a better class of men, and inspection at irregular times day and night by competent inspectors, in my opinion.

A gold collar button and a small penknife which were taken from me when I entered were not returned, and my requests for them have been "bluffed off."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, personally appeared George W. Bastin, of Congress Heights, D. C., who, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he has been an inmate of the Government Hospital for the Insane (St. Elizabeth) as a patient and employee; that he was first admitted as a patient in September, 1888, and was a patient until about April, 1893, when he was employed as a barber, shaving and hair cutting the patients regularly, and after finishing their work he would shave and cut the hair of the attendants and employees; that he served as such barber until October 5, 1897, when he was discharged as an employee and left the institution. He was receiving $30 per month salary from the hospital for attending its patients, and regular charges from the employees for serving them. He shaved one of the physicians regularly.

That he was readmitted to the institution about December 1, 1903, as a patient, and remained there until about June 9, 1905, when he was discharged as cured; during this last-named period he also shaved himself and employees, but got no pay from the Government. His trouble was caused by constipation and obstruction of the bowels, but he was not insane, and had full powers of observation and knowledge of the hospital hapenings during his entire location there. That he is an honorably discharged soldier—Regular Army service—and a pensioner at $17 per month. That during his last term in said hospital, under the present superintendent, Doctor White, he saw no improvement in methods of treatment or discipline, excepting, perhaps, the introduction of hot baths, which he could get about two weeks after he would ask for the same. The food, if any different, is worse than under Doctor Godding's administration. The preparation and cooking of it is largely done by inexperienced help, and even when in the raw it is passably good, it is made almost uneatable when served.

His observation of the visits of the board of visitors and of the superintendent showed them to be merely formal, and not such inspection as would serve any good purpose. Everything was cleaned up, and the rough-looking, poorly dressed male patients, soldiers, and civilians hustled to the woods out of sight in all kinds of weather; this he has seen frequently done on visiting days. The ladies on the committee would pass their kid-glove fingers over the cups and plates to see that they were clean, but he never knew them to pass through and inspect the food on the tables when the boys were eating, after it was cooked. In affiant's opinion the visits of the board of visitors only occasioned a weekly cleaning up and a little better food on their days of visiting in the wards they visited.

As to treatment and discipline, affiant states that it was in general rough and brutal; cursing and blows were of frequent occurrence under Godding and White. During his last term there, under Doctor White, he has witnessed frequent cases of ill treatment; in particular he mentions the conduct of one Jones, a student and night nurse, known as "Doctor Jones," who, on a number of occasions would get irritated because the patients would make a noise, or otherwise interfere with his reading and studying, and would jump up, curse, and swear at them, throw them down, kick them, and jump with his knees on their stomach, and threaten to kill them if they did not keep quiet. It was a common thing for some of the attendants to crack patients on the neck with their key straps; he has seen towels placed about patients' necks and twisted until they would be almost strangled. The bathing was simply dirty, between half a dozen and a dozen patients being frequently compelled to bath in the same water.

Affiant has seen canvass suits, strait-jackets, and straps used on patients, and while there during his first confinement affiant was subjected to the same restraints. Has seen feeding tubes used through nostril unnecessarily, in his opinion.

In the general dining room, at Atkins Hall and connecting buildings, the food was very poor; meat so tough affiant frequently could not chew it; very seldom any milk for oatmeal or any other purpose; no decent tea or coffee, and weak, greasy soups; very seldom any sugar; no poultry or eggs except on Easter or other holidays. On Thanksgiving, 1904, old Captain Waters, being irritated because roast pork was served instead of the expected roast turkey dinner, called out after Doctor White, "Teddy in the White House eating meat and honey; White in the Ted House stealing turkey money." For this the captain's parole was taken away, and he was put in the bull pen and was there when affiant left. Affiant further states that, in his opinion, if they had more attendants and shorter hours conditions would be very much better.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, Thomas L. McMurray, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That I was employed at St. Elizabeth as a laundry hand from September 22, 1901, until January 22, 1906, when I was discharged.

That during the last year of my employment I noted the following cases of abuse:

That a patient by the name of Obedie was kicked and cuffed time and time again by Millard Sidnor and Harry Satterfield; that cursing was common; that the patients in the wash house are overworked; that this was borne out by the action of one of the doctors in taking patient by the name of Hopper out of wash room.

That during the year 1904–5 I was told by J. V. Burroughs that he saw Satterfield have Joe Marlin, a patient, down beating him. E. L. Maenche, the foreman of the laundry, caught Satterfield in the act; said Maenche caught Satterfield beating and choking Alfonso Rollin, a patient. I saw this act myself. Maenche did not discharge or report Satterfield, who is still working there. This same Satterfield also abused, by kicking and striking, Mike Liston and William Crimmins, both patients. This I saw personally. On the 24th day of last January, 1906, J. V. Burroughs against E. L. Maenche preferred charges, setting up that Maenche knew of these abuses and made no report of same among the counts in the charges against the foreman of the laundry, which were, drunk while on duty and in hospital grounds, allowing the abuse of patients, etc. No suspension from duty or anything was done about this matter by Doctor White.

That last year $10,000 was spent in new laundry addition and machinery; that the machines they purchased they have had no use for them, and probably never will have. The food that the patients and employees get is bad, poorly cooked, and badly served; that twice a year, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas, the doctors come to the kitchen to look at the food.

T. L. MCMURRAY.

The originals of these affidavits I have here, sworn to by the people who make them, and under the solemn sanctity of their oaths they say that these charges are absolutely true; yet the Committee on Rules declines to report; yet the Committee on Rules takes no steps; yet the Committee on Rules, by their action, say if these things are true we do not propose to permit the House of Representatives to interfere.

Well, Mr. Chairman, after this resolution was introduced the gentleman from Ohio, my distinguished friend General GROSVENOR, introduced a bill. His bill was for an investigation. I want permission, Mr. Chairman, also to put that bill in the RECORD. It provided that the board of visitors of this institution should make an investigation. It armed them with the powers of a court. It gave them not only power to have witnesses subpœnaed, to administer oaths, to examine them, but it gave them the power to punish for contempt; it clothed them with every power possessed by any court of record in this land.

When that bill came up for action on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio for consideration I offered certain amendments to it, all of which were accepted except the last, and to that he raised no objection. These amendments were intended to, and did have the effect of, giving the persons who made charges against the management of this institution a "square deal" in the hearing. The bill of the gentleman from Ohio put them absolutely in the power of the board of visitors; put them absolutely at their mercy; put them where, if a witness or a complainant appeared before them, these men could, if they saw fit, send them to jail for refusing to answer improper questions.

These amendments changed that and made the bill a fair one, as far as any bill could possibly be made fair which provided for any body of men to examine themselves. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that if irregularities exist in that institution, if mismanagement is there, if wrong has invaded its secret precincts and taken up its domicile within its walls, then the board of visitors are responsible for it. Yet here is a bill proposing to give the people who are under charge, the people whose conduct is called in question, the power to investigate and pass upon their own shortcomings or wrongdoing. It gives them the power, further—the extraordinary power—of dealing harshly by process of contempt with those who dare to make the charge. The bill as originally presented reads as follows:

A bill to authorize the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane to summon and examine witnesses under oath, and making it a misdemeanor for any such witness to refuse to attend or testify or produce books and papers when summoned.

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane shall, as a part of the supervision now required of them by law, have power to make such public investigations from time to time as shall, in their judgment, be necessary for the ascertainment and correction of abuses and for the general well-being of the patients and the efficient and economical administration of the hospital in all its branches; and to that end the board of visitors are hereby empowered to summon witnesses and examine them under oath, such oath to be administered by the secretary of the board or any member thereof; and any witness who shall knowingly and willfully swear falsely as to any matter involved in any such investigation shall be deemed guilty of perjury, as defined by section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as prescribed by said section; and any witness who shall refuse to attend any such investigation in obedience to a summons signed by the secretary of the board of visitors, or any member thereof, or who, being in attendance, shall refuse to testify or to produce any books or papers relating to any matter under investigation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days, or by both; and the fees and allowances of such witnesses shall be the same as are allowed witnesses attending on the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and when certified to by the president or other member of the board shall be paid by the superintendent as part of the general expenses of the hospital and credited as such in his accounts at the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That whenever a witness summoned as aforesaid refuses to attend or testify or produce books or papers it shall be the duty of the board of visitors to certify such refusal to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action, and if an indictment be found he shall prosecute the same with expedition.

But after these amendments were adopted, Mr. Chairman, the bill went to the Senate. What took place then? According to a clipping in one of the Washington papers, which I have here, but I will not take the time of the House to read, but ask leave to print in the RECORD, the board of visitors of this institution addressed a letter to the Senate committee to whom the bill had been referred, protesting against the adoption of the House amendments. They insisted upon the passage of the bill as it was originally introduced, arming them with all this extraordinary power. The clipping is from the Washington Star of March 22, 1906, and is as follows:

HOSPITAL FOR INSANE—INVESTIGATION DISCUSSED BY BOARD OF VISITORS.

The proposed investigation of the Government Hospital for the Insane, on charges recently made by the Medico-Legal Society of the District of Columbia, was revived at a meeting of the board of visitors of that institution yesterday afternoon. Surg. Gen. F. M. Gunnell, of the Navy, retired, presided. Attention was called to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives empowering the board to conduct the investigation and to summon witnesses, etc.

It was the sense of the board that the resolution in its present form was inoperative and would defeat the very object for which it was formulated—a thorough investigation into the affairs of the hospital and the methods employed there. It was explained that the resolution as at first presented in the House would have accomplished the desired object, but that it had been "loaded down with amendments, which would destroy its force and purpose."

One of the amendments is said to practically give the witness under examination the right to decide what questions are competent or irrelevant, and to decline to answer such questions until a decision as to their competency or irrelevancy is passed upon by a justice of the District supreme court. Another provides for the holding of the investigation in this city, and another that the investigating board shall summon from any place all the witnesses that may be called for by either side of the controversy.

The board, at its meeting yesterday, formulated a protest against these amendments, and it has been forwarded to the District Committee of the Senate, by which the resolution for the investigation by the board of visitors is being considered. It is the hope of the members of the board that the "unnecessary and killing" amendments will be eliminated from the resolution by the Senate and the resolution passed in its original shape.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from these interviews, which I shall have published in the RECORD, it will appear that this board of visitors were not proper persons to make an examination for another reason—because they had prejudged the case. In their interviews—in their statements which were published—they deny these charges; they hoot and scout the idea that any such thing could exist.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I am with the gentleman in regard to this insane asylum. My information regarding its mismanagement and conduct by the officials over there and the inhuman and barbarous treatment of the patients, and scandals, is a disgrace to the Government. This institution should be investigated, and investigated by a nonpartisan, impartial committee of this House. I want to ask the gentleman from Florida why it is that the committee refused to report his resolution which has been pending before the committee for a long time?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have just stated, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution had been before the committee for two months, and that ten affidavits, or copies of them, had gone to the committee. Why the Committee on Rules does not report I can not tell the gentleman. I have not the slightest idea on earth. There is no reason why they should not. There does not exist a single scintilla of a reason why the Committee on Rules should not report the resolution. They may have some good reason, and, if so, I would like for one member of that committee to give it to the House and the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman seems to have read a good deal from the newspapers; have not the people in charge of the institution made any reply through the newspapers?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and I will publish them, too. The articles refered to are as follows:

[Washington Post, February 24, 1906.]

ASYLUM PROBE TO-DAY—BOARD OF VISITORS TO BEGIN THOROUGH INVESTIGATION—DEMAND IMMEDIATE INQUIRY—MEMBERS DECLARE THERE IS NO IMPROPRIETY IN PROSECUTING AN INVESTIGATION OF THE CHARGES OF GROSS MISMANAGEMENT BEFORE CONGRESS HAS AN OPPORTUNITY TO LOOK INTO THE CONDITIONS.

Impropriety on the part of the board of visitors of St. Elizabeth's Hospital in prosecuting an investigation of charges of mismanagement in that institution pending an investigation by the House, as suggested by Richard P. Evans, attorney for the Medico-Legal Society, is not conceded by Dr. F. M. Gunnell, president of the board of visitors.

The fact that the Medico-Legal Society has declared its intention to refrain from presenting any evidence to the board of visitors in support of its charges of gross mismanagement will not serve to postpone the investigation, declares Doctor Gunnell.

"The board of visitors will meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock in the administration building," said Doctor Gunnell, "prepared to hear all complaints against the management of the hospital.

"There is no one so much interested in proving the truth or falsity of the charges made against the hospital by the Medico-Legal Society as the board of visitors.

"The action of the Medico-Legal Society in asking for a Congressional investigation, carrying with it an imputation that the investigation to be made by the board of visitors would result in a whitewashing report, will not deter the board from probing into the charges made by that society or those emanating from any other source.

HITCHCOCK URGES INQUIRY.

"The determination of the board to conduct a searching investigation was communicated to Secretary Hitchcock, who expressed the opinion that it was its duty to make an immediate investigation.

"Even though the charges made by the Medico-Legal Society were such as to be easily controvertible by the board, yet they are so serious that it is deemed imperative a public investigation should be made, to be followed by a report analyzing each specific charge."

A copy of the correspondence passed between the board of visitors and the Medico-Legal Society since the publication of the sensational charges against the hospital follows:

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1906.

RICHARD P. EVANS,
1101 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The president of the board of visitors of the hospital directs me to inform you that there will be a meeting of the board held in the administration building at 10 a. m. Saturday, the 24th instant.

You are requested to be present at that time to give evidence touching certain statements which have recently appeared in the public press over your signature.

Very respectfully, WILLIAM A. WHITE, Secretary.

MR. EVANS'S REPLY.

The reply to this letter was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1906.

WILLIAM A. WHITE, M. D.,
Secretary Board of Visitors,
Government Hospital for the Insane.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your two letters of the 21st instant, addressed to Dr. Charles M. Emmons and myself, requesting our appearance before your board of visitors at the administration building on Saturday, 24th instant, at 10 a. m., to give evidence relative to subject-matter of our report as a committee of the Medico-Legal Society of the District of Columbia (Incorporated), I have to state, as attorney for the society, that, exclusive of other reasons, we would not be justified in participating in any inquiry by your board pending action upon the resolution now under consideration providing for such investigation by a committee of the House of Representatives. This would be forestalling the action of Congress.

In this connection I beg leave to ask whether the board of visitors has considered the apparent impropriety of conducting this investigation, in the course of which the secretary and other members of the board will be called upon to testify and in the result of which each member has a deep personal interest. Your board in arriving at a decision would necessarily have to pass judgment upon its own testimony and upon its own past official acts. The delicacy of the situation would be pronounced.

Under separate cover I mail you copies of the committee's report, which will be presented to the Secretary of the Interior to-day.

Very respectfully,

REFUSES TO MAKE COMMENT.

In discussing the communication of Mr. Evans, questioning the propriety of the board of visitors proceeding with the investigation under existing circumstances, Doctor Gunnell stated that he did not care to comment on the motives actuating the Medico-Legal Society.

"I will say, however," he said, "that any investigation conducted by Congress would undoubtedly be in conjunction with the board of visitors. Information secured by the board will at all times be at the disposal of the House committee deputed to conduct the investigation."

The charges made by the Medico-Legal Society were freely discussed by Doctor Gunnell. Referring to the accusations that patients are maltreated and are subjected to physical violence by the keepers, Doctor Gunnell stated that he could not credit the existence of such a condition.

"To strike a patient," he said, "is considered an unpardonable sin, and has always been followed by the immediate discharge of the offending attendant. Doctor White has gone even further than merely discharging the attendant. He has turned such hospital employees over to the police and prosecuted them on charges of assault and battery.

"In the investigation to be conducted by the board of visitors the hospital employees will be called in one by one and not only questioned as to their personal conduct, but will be required to answer such questions: 'Did you ever see an attendant strike a patient?' If so, 'Did you report it to the proper authorities?' 'To whom did you make the report and when?'

TRUTH WILL BE SOUGHT.

"In its investigation the board will shield no one, and the truth, no matter who is injured thereby, will be sought and embodied in its report."

In the printed copy of the report of the special committee of the Medico-Legal Society on "Care and Treatment of the Insane" an addendum is included presenting in part the following facts regarding the care of the insane in various asylums:

"In the Illinois Asylum for the Incurable Insane narcotics are never administered on the wards by day or by night. All such medicines are beyond the reach of inmate or attendant. Mechanical restraint has been absolutely abolished. There is no cell, cell room, barred or grated window. Methodical care and classification have made restraint unnecessary even in the most violent cases.

"The substitution of female for male attendants on male wards has gone on until 500 of male insane are cared for exclusively by women.

ELIMINATES ALL ABUSE.

"The elimination of all possible abuse alone makes the introduction of female attendants on male wards invaluable.

"From biennial reports of superintendent of the Arizona Asylum for the Insane: 'A kind word, a pleasant smile, an assuirng touch will almost invariably quiet the most excitable patient, convincing him that he has nothing to fear and no harm is intended him.'

"In the report of the Topeka (Kans.) State Hospital it is stated: 'The old methods of force and intimidation have been superseded by kindness, tact, and intelligence.'

"Doctor Drewry, of the Central State Hospital of Virginia, says in his report: 'For eight or ten years past there has not been a single patient in the hospital subjected to the cruelty of any form of physical restraint whatever.'

"The board of managers of the State Hospital of Missouri, No. 2, at St. Joseph, in their last biennial report declare: 'Idleness in hospitals for insane is as prone to evil and bad results as idleness among the sane.'

"Dr. H. B. Meredith, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane at Danville, Pa., expressed himself as follows: 'The care of insane criminals should have no part in the treatment of the noncriminal. The vicious by heredity or education, who have likewise become insane, form the worst type of degeneracy. To compel everyday association with this class tends to inflict irreparable injury upon those who have led correct lives, though unfortunately alienated.'

COST HIGHEST HERE.

"An examination of the per capita tables of seventy-nine insane asylums, which includes those in almost every State in the Union, shows that the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia heads the list as to the cost of management; that it stands No. 27 in the column of recoveries and No. 5 as having the highest death rate.

"It appears also from this table of comparison that the institutions having a small number of inmates cost the State a greater per capita than those of large population. For instance, Dannemora State Asylum, New York, costs the State $202.80 per capita, and has only 260 patients, while Wards Island Asylum, in the same State, with 4,366 patients, costs the State but $167.71.

"We note that the average per capita cost for the twelve insane asylums of New York shows it to be $190. The average per capita cost for the five insane asylums of the State of Ohio is $101.04. The three Virginia insane asylums average $104 per capita, and when we consider that this State has the same climate and markets as our local institution at St. Elizabeth we see no reason for the per capita cost of $220 as against $104 for the State Asylum of Virginia.

"In the face of these comparisons the per capita cost of the Government Hospital for the Insane should never exceed $200 per capita. Anything in excess of this amount is needless.

"It appears that many of the State institutions include all expenditures in figuring their per capita cost. If this were the case with St. Elizabeth, the per capita cost would exceed $300."

ASYLUM HEARING OFF TO WEDNESDAY—ST. ELIZABETH'S BOARD IN NEED OF WITNESSES—WISHES POWER TO SUBPŒNA—ADJOURNS TO LEARN IF IT CAN NOT FORCE MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY MEMBERS TO TESTIFY.

The investigation of the charges made by the Medico-Legal Society of the District against the administration and conduct of affairs at the Government Hospital for the Insane, which began at the hospital this morning, opened with an executive session and ended in the adoption of the following resolution:

"The board of visitors, having met this morning and having found that those who have published in the newspapers charges against this hospital have declined their invitation to appear before the board and give testimony in substantiation of these charges: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the board do now adjourn until 2 o'clock p. m. Wednesday, the 28th instant, in order to ascertain whether or not the board has power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to administer judicial oaths; and if it should be found that such power does not now reside in this board to take steps necessary to clothe the board with such power, in the interest of a full judicial inquiry into the charges lodged against this hospital and into its condition and administration."

UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED.

Despite the reported announcement of the board's chairman, Dr. F. M. Grinnell, that it would proceed with the investigation under any circumstances, the actual investigation was not even begun. This failure was caused by the refusal of the Medico-Legal Society, by its officers, to appear and give testimony. The resolutions were adopted by a unanimous vote, and were offered by the Rev. Dr. Teunis S. Hamlin.

The refusal of the Medico-Legal Society to apear and give evidence was contained in a letter from its law officer, Richard P. Evans, to Dr. William A. White, superintendent of the hospital and secretary of the board of visitors. The letter was printed in the Times yesterday. This stand of the society necessitated a complete change of plans on the part of the board and was evidently the subject of much careful consideration at this morning's session.

NOT ALL PRESENT.

The members of the board present were Dr. F. M. Gunnell, president; Gen. John Moore, Gen. Walter Wyman, the Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin, William A. Maury, Mrs. A. M. Gangewer, and Mrs. Gardiner Hubbard. One of the absentees, S. H. Kauffman, is ill at his residence, and was unable on this account to be present.

A squad of newspaper reporters descended upon the administration building of the hospital at 10 o'clock, the hour announced for the investigation to begin. They were made very welcome, and given every facility to gaze out of the windows of the room in which the "investigation" was to have been held. There they meditated and cooled their heels in patience, and meantime the meeting of the board was in progress in the office of Doctor White. It continued in session nearly two hours.

At 11.45 the members of the board, accompanied by Doctor White, filed into the board room, where the reporters, representing the anxious public, were in waiting.

"MEETING" ACTUALLY BEGINS.

Doctor Gunnell called the meeting to order, and asked for the minutes of the last meeting. Doctor White offered to produce them if it were necessary, but it was decided finally that a summary would answer the purpose. The minutes were summarized by the chairman to the following cogent, precise, and remarkable effect:

"The board met and adjourned."

This weighty preliminary being disposed of, Doctor Hamlin then read the resolutions he offered, using for the purpose a typewritten manuscript.

The resolution adopted, the meeting stood adjourned, and carbon copies of the board's action were distributed to the reporters.

In the closed session it was decided that application for opinions as to the board's power should be made to the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior. Until these are furnished, nothing further will be done.

[Washington Post, February 25, 1906.]

DEMANDS THE PROOF—ASYLUM BOARD WOULD COMPEL WITNESSES TO TESTIFY—INQUIRES ABOUT ITS POWERS—RESOLUTION IS ADOPTED WHICH SEEKS TO FORCE THE MEMBERS OF THE MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY TO APPEAR, AND UNDER OATH TELL WHAT THEY KNOW ABOUT ALLEGED MISMANAGEMENT—WILLING TO APPEAR.

The board of visitors of St. Elizabeth, the Government Hospital for the Insane, yesterday decided to attempt to force the members of the Medico-Legal Society of Washington to testify before it as to the charges of gross mismanagement made.

The board was in executive session for two hours, and this was the only conclusion reached. The stand taken by the board is that inasmuch as the charges made by the society are the only matter before it nothing can be done if the men who made the charges refuse to testify, unless the board has the power to summon them as witnesses and to administer oaths.

The resolution adopted follows:

"The board of visitors having met this morning and having found that those who have published in the newspapers charges against this hospital have declined their invitation to appear before the board to give testimony in substantiation of these charges: Therefore, be it

WOULD KNOW ITS POWERS.

"Resolved, That the board do now adjourn until 2 o'clock Wednesday, February 28, in order to ascertain whether or not the board has power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to administer judicial oaths; and if it should be found that such power does not now reside in this board, to take necessary steps to clothe the board with such power in the interest of a full judicial inquiry into the charges lodged against this hospital, and into its condition and administration."

Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin introduced the resolution, which was unanimously adopted, the following members being present and voting for it: Surg. Gen. F. M. Gunnell, United States Navy; Surg. Gen. John Moore, United States Army; Surg. Gen. Walter Wyman, United States Marine-Hospital Service; former Assistant Attorney William A. Maury, Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin, Mrs. Gardiner Hubbard, and Mrs. A. M. Gangewer.

Members discussing the postponement of the investigation until Wednesday say that in the interim the legal branch of the Department of the Interior will be consulted as to the power of the board to summon witnesses.

Those interested in the charges are making inquiry into the personnel of the Medico-Legal Society, which made the sensational charges a week ago. To those charges were appended the names of three men—Dr. C. M. Emmons, Dr. Robert Reyburn, and R. P. Evans, attorney.

SOCIETY IS INCORPORATED.

Parties most affected by the charges have sought to learn the membership of the organization, but claim they have been unsuccessful. Attorney R. P. Evans, of the Medico-Legal Society, stated that there were reasons why the list of members of the organization should not be published. He cited the fact that the organization was incorporated and that the list of incorporators refuted the accusation that the membership was limited to three men. The incorporation and the present list of officers show the following men as active in the work of the society:

Dr. Robert Reyburn, president; Dr. William D. Hughes, vice-president; Dr. C. M. Emmons, secretary; Dr. C. B. Robinson, treasurer; R. P. Evans, attorney, and James E. Padgett, associate attorney.

The articles of incorporation state that the object of the society is the enactment of such legislation as will promote the interests of the citizens of the District of Columbia, the discussion of all civic affairs of a medical or legal character, and the encouragement of a closer social affiliation among reputable professional men of the city.

"On Monday," said Mr. Evans, "we hope to get a report of a resolution now before the House for a Congressional investigation of the affairs of the asylum. We hope for this investigation, because we hold that the board of visitors, having the responsibility for any unsatisfactory conditions existing, would not naturally apply the probe as would outside investigators.

WILLING TO APPEAR.

"If Congress does not see fit to investigate, then we are willing to appear before the board, but conditionally. We will willingly appear if we are granted the privilege of calling witnesses to substantiate the charges we have made. We want the privilege of bringing out our side of the case and of putting even doctors and officers of the institution on the stand. Should we call an attendant, we want it understood that he is not to lose his position because of testimony he should give that would be damaging to the institution."

Upon these points there are likely to arise differences as to the manner in which the investigation will be conducted, and the probability is that its manner will be entirely changed when the issue comes.

When the matter is referred to the Interior Department for opinions as to the legal phases and the powers of the board of visitors, it is probable that the matter may be taken entirely out of the hands of the board and turned over to the investigating board of the Department, which has the service of skilled men and authority to summon witnesses and administer oaths.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they say about it—deny everything?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, hardly that, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee. I read one of their so-called denials the other day, and it was to the effect that they were investigating themselves and at some future time would make a report.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one or two of these affidavits, and I want to ask permission to put these ten affidavits that were sent to the Committee on Rules in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and also two additional affidavits, which I have. I will not have the time to read them all. I hope the House will permit me to do that. Here is an affidavit which I desire to read, and I hope gentlemen will listen to this particular one. It is as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
County of Milwaukee, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the county and State aforesaid, Daniel Oscar Hoffman, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: I am the identical Oscar Hoffman who, on or about March 3, 1903, was seized at my home, 1513 Thirtieth street NW., Washington, D. C., by policemen without a warrant, confined in a filthy cell at a police station for six or eight hours, and then, without opportunity to consult counsel or my friends, I was taken forcibly to St. Elizabeth Insane Asylum, Washington, D. C., and there kept as being an insane person, and abominably treated. A day or so after, I was handed a paper of some sort, a writ, which an attendant took away from me and tore up, and I was never taken before a court for a hearing as to my sanity.

I remained in St. Elizabeth until about Christmas, 1903, when I was permitted by the hospital authorities to go home to spend Christmas, and I never went back. Shortly afterwards I visited Europe and spent some time in Berlin and Dresden. My experiences in St. Elizabeth were, briefly, as follows: Upon my arrival they took me to "center," and there I was scrubbed down with scrub brush, such as is used in scrubbing floors; my request for an attorney and examination into my mental condition was ignored. I was kept there one night, and then taken to the Toner Building in the morning, where I was under charge of a Doctor Logie. One of my first experiences there was being hit in back of neck by an attendant and knocked down, for what reason I know not, as at the time I was only trying to get out of the way of a patient who ran at me. Neither before nor since my confinement in St. Elizabeth have I ever used opium, morphine, or similar drugs in any form, but my flesh looked like a pepper box from hypodermic injections when I left there; other drugs were administered; I was cursed and damned, struck and choked, kicked in stomach and testicles, smashed in face, and the swelling caused an ulcer, and I was strapped down and four sound teeth taken out—to find the ulcerated one, I suppose. I grew somewhat restive under this treatment and was sat in the "saddle." The "saddle" was a contrivance of straps stretched across the bed in somewhat the outlined form. "A" is, I suppose, the part from which it received its name, as from it all the straps emanate. Upon one's introduction to the bed of torture it looked very much like the outline. The straps, after the patient was placed in the saddle, were secured around the side and head and front bars of the bed and brought tight over and around.

This is a delightful contrivance, where I was strapped and bound, hands, feet, legs, and neck, so that I could not move a muscle, and could only roll my eyes or head around, while in a reclining position; here I was left alone a whole day, without water or food, and no one paid any attention to my cries. It is a mercy of God that kept me from going raving mad. Dante's Inferno does not describe the torture I endured; the agony was indescribable; this was to subdue the spirits of the patients; it was frequently used upon others. The patients were frequently "wrung out," by throwing wet towels around the neck and twisting the ends from behind or before until they would become almost unconscious from slow strangulation. I underwent this experience several times; once in particular to the point of unconsciousness for several minutes. I saw young men—boys—choked by "wringing out" until they would fall senseless, frothing at the mouth. The attendants were for the most part ignorant, vulgar, cruel, and vicious. They were cursing and damning all the time, and upon slightest pretext would strike and kick me and others, "wring" us out, etc., although there were a few, in my experience, with good, Christian hearts.

I was struck on the side of head with broomstick by one of the attendant, and have a disfigured ear as the result of those blows; my nostril is distended, and my throat and voice injured by unnecessary use of the feeding tube, when I was willing and anxious to eat and drink. It was forced up my nostril and down my throat, and, to make it worse, they would frequently not grease it, but put it in dry. This feeding tube was a standing threat, and was frequently used, without reason or necessity, to discipline the patients. Drugs were administered to patients for the amusement of watching their funny actions while under their effects. The attendants had free access to the drugs. If any patient woke up in the night he was drugged to make him sleep. A watchman would go around every hour or so with flashing light; would wake some up; reported not asleep—more drugs. It was a common practice to tie the patients in bed with "restraining sheets," and keep them so for hours—sometimes all night. I was so tied down in bed a whole night by an open window, and caught cold and the inflammatory rheumatism in consequence. During my incarceration I had typhoid fever, when I was kept in restraining sheets. From typhoid my weight fell to 90 pounds, according to report. Wonderful that I should survive my treatment during and after such emaciation, when it is remembered my normal weight is from 170 to 180 stripped. My weight upon entrance was below par, about 140 stripped, I believe. Some one of the patients informed my mother of how I was being maltreated, and she complained to Doctor White, the superintendent. He had me brought before Doctor Logie and others, and asked me if I had any complaints to make; but I knew better than to complain, for if sent back to the ward I knew it would be unhealthy for me, so I refused to say anything, as Mr. Blimar was in earshot. They used the douche for treatment, throwing such a stream of cold water against me and other delicate patients that it would knock us down. Torture, tyranny, and abuse kept me and others in a constant condition of fear and apprehension.

I wish to say a word for the criminal insane. Constant imprisonment, and only a little courtyard in center of their building for their airing. I heard frequent cries of pain from there. They are human beings and should have humane treatment.

D. O. N. HOFFMANN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of March, 1906.
[SEAL.] H. SCHLOMOVITZ,
Notary Public.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, I shall not take up the time of the House—I have not the time at my disposal—to read these affidavits. They are similar in character to the one that I have read. These affidavits are made by attendants, ex-attendants, and ex-patients. It will not do to say that they can not be believed because they are not now in the employ of the institution or that they are not now in the care of the institution. You can not get at the facts in any institution like this by any person other than those who are in a position to know the facts, and no person is in a position to know those facts except the inmates of the institution. Why, on state occasions, when the board of visitors go to make their annual visit, everything is in order for their reception, everything has been cleaned and prepared and made ready for the board of visitors, and doubtless they never see anything that is wrong or that indicates cruelty or mismanagement. Here are these people, a round dozen of them, whose affidavits I shall ask permission to put in the RECORD, and they detail a story of brutality, a story of mismanagement, that should bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every citizen of America. Here, within the very shadow of the Dome of the Capitol; here, in the very center of our boasted American civilization, these people are treated like common brutes, worse than the dogs that roam your streets or bay in your back yards. I say, in the face of this, will the Committee on Rules, autocratic power that it is, continue to deny to this House the right to investigate this institution of the Government, this institution that ought to be the pride of every Member of this Congress, that ought to be near and dear to the heart of every citizen of America? I ask again, Will the Committee on Rules, accustomed to the exercise of autocratic power, accustomed to the denial of the right of the people to be heard, accustomed to throttling the voice of the people's representatives here on this floor—will the Committee on Rules, in the face of all these horrible facts as detailed in these affidavits, deny to this House the right to have the affairs of this sacred institution investigated? [Applause.] My God, Mr. Chairman, surely they will not carry their power to that length. Surely this is where they will call a halt and say that the representatives of the people shall have the privilege to investigate this institution and let the people know the truth.

In addition to all these charges of cruelty and mismanagement there is another charge which I have here, if gentlemen care to examine the court records of this District. Old soldiers and sailors are incarcerated there. I have before me the record of a case which shows this state of facts: Last year the superintendent of this asylum went into court by a petition asking for an investigation into the sanity of a soldier incarcerated there. That man had been there since 1883, the supposition being that when a man is incarcerated his insanity has been determined. Yet he had been there since 1883, with no determination, apparently, of this question, and last year the superintendent went into the court and asked for an investigation into the matter of his sanity. This old soldier had coming to him from the General Government $224 in arrears of pension. The attorney for the superintendent, who filed the petition, received as fees out of this old man's pittance of $224 the sum of $25. His law partner was appointed by the court as the committee in lunacy, and he received out of this money 10 per cent, or twenty-two dollars and something. Two physicians examined him as to his sanity, one of them being a physician in the asylum, who was paid a salary by the Government, and each got $10 for investigating and giving the certificate as to this man's sanity, and then with the court costs and other charges it cost this old soldier $80.10 to collect $224 due him by the Government of the United States. Insane, nearing the place where he would take passage for the other shore, faithful to his country, upon her pension rolls in recognition of his gallant services, tottering on to the grave, and his reason gone, in this humane institution that we have built for the care and maintenance of such as he—these people pounced upon him and took from him $80.10 out of $224, when it ought not to have cost him a cent. There ought to be some arrangement made by which it would be impossible for court costs and attorneys' fees to devour the small sums allowed by the Government to make easier the pathway of the old soldier as he journeys to his long home.

And I am told, Mr. Chairman, upon good authority, that this very same firm of lawyers average fifty to sixty of just such cases every year. An old soldier is in there; they find that he has got some back pension money coming to him; a petition is filed, and these enormous fees are taken out of his little pittance, he without reason and unable to complain. So you have, Mr. Chairman, charges of gross and most inhuman treatment; you have charges of pilfering the little pittance provided by a generous Government for the old soldier; you have these charges made emanating from respectable quarters, and yet we appeal in vain for an opportunity to test the truth of the charges made. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word further as to the source of these charges. When I saw these newspaper accounts I investigated the people behind the charges. I found, Mr. Chairman, that they were made primarily by what was known as the "Medico-Legal Society." I found the president of that society is Dr. Robert Reyburn, a citizen of this city for more than fifty years, a man of large property interests, a man who is prominent in his profession and among his people, and who was one of the attending surgeons, if not the chief one, when the lamented Garfield was stricken with the assassin's bullet. I found that the attorney for the society was Mr. Richard P. Evans, an attorney at law in good standing, who has lived here for twenty-five years. I found that the secretary of the society was Dr. Charles M. Emmons, a physician in good standing in his profession, who has lived here all his life. These are the sources from which the charges emanated. These are the people who preferred them. These are the people who say they are ready to prove them. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the man with the "muck rake" is not so dangerous to our republican Government as is the man with the whitewash brush. [Applause.] He is the more dangerous of the two; he is the more despicable of the two. The man with the whitewash brush, ready at all times to smear over the muck and to hide it from the public, to conceal it from the public gaze, is infinitely worse than the man with the "muck rake" who would expose it to the public view in order that affairs might be remedied. I am putting these facts before this House, Mr. Chairman, to appeal to this Congress to at least investigate this institution. If the charges are not true, no harm can be done. If they are true, then in God's name let us wipe out of place every official in any manner responsible for these things [applause], and at least have clean and humane officials in charge of our unfortunate fellow-beings who, owing to the decrees of Providence, can not help themselves. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to ask consent to put these newspaper articles in the RECORD and also to put into the RECORD these ten affidavits and the two others which have not been sent to the Committee on Rules, and I thank the House for its very close attention, trusting that my remarks may ultimately result in good to this institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRUMPACKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8997) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BURKETT, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4886) to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16133. An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States; and

H. R. 18334. An act making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for bringing home remains of officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who die abroad.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5533. An act to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York;

S. 5489. An act to provide for sittings of the circuit and district courts of the southern district of Florida in the city of Miami, in said district; and

S. 5297. An act providing for the erection of an addition to the post-office building at Washington, D. C.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes, or more, if he desires—I believe he said ten minutes—to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it is possible the comments that I desire to make upon the highly impassioned speech of the gentleman from Florida may occupy more than ten minutes of time. For myself, as a member of the Committee on Rules, I never heard until the statement was made here to-day that the gentleman from Florida had introduced any resolution in regard to the subject-matter about which he has been speaking, and since his very violent attack upon the Committee on Rules I have investigated the whole subject so far as the action or nonaction of the Committee on Rules is concerned and will show to the gentleman from Florida and to the House how easy it is for a man who does not understand what he is trying to do to fail to do anything, and then of course he feels disappointed and disgusted and insulted and outraged by the failure of somebody else to do something that he thinks they ought to do and which they were never invited to do. I suppose that the Members of the House, most of them, understand the processes by which a proceeding of this kind is usually carried on, and I want to make a statement of the exact facts so far as the Committee on Rules is concerned. Some time in February the gentleman from Florida introduced a resolution suggesting and providing for a special committee to investigate the asylum over here. At that time, bear in mind, so far as any official knowledge was concerned, there was no information or suggestion to the Committee on Rules that there was any complaint against the asylum. Of course there were newspaper articles, but the Committee on Rules has not been in the habit of appointing an investigating committee every time there is a charge in a newspaper against somebody.

As I have said, the resolution was sent to the committee. I did not know it was there, nor did the other members of the committee. It took the usual course, and lay in the hands of the secretary of the committee waiting for such action as is usually a requisite to putting the matter into some kind of activity. And until to-day not one word has made its appearance, not a sound has come from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asking any action by the committee. A few days ago—the exact date is not ascertainable, because the action was non-official—a bundle of papers was handed to the clerk of the Committee on Rules. The first time I ever heard of that fact I heard here to-day by the gentleman's impassioned attack upon the committee, and I have inquired of the other two members—Republican members—of the committee, and they both say they never heard of these affidavits or any other paper in connection with the transaction. When I come to examine the papers I find there is nothing before the committee to-day upon which any committee would act under any circumstances whatever. There is a lot of papers purporting to be copies, but not an original paper, not a substantial allegation of any fact, but a lot of copies in the hands of the secretary, and that is all there is of it. Now, then, who is to blame? If the gentleman from Florida had come to the Committee on Rules, if he had understood the processes that he was invoking, he would have come to that committee and asked their consideration of his resolution. But he has not seen fit to do that, so far as I am informed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it is not true that those ten copies of affidavits, which he says were dumped in there, have not a letter attached to them from an attorney of standing in this city, Mr. Richard P. Evans, and does not he in that letter say to you that he is ready at any time to produce the originals and urge action upon the report?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the Committee on Rules feel obligated, when some attorney wants to be heard, to thereupon put the processes in motion? That is more absurd than anything else the gentleman has suggested. But that fact was not known. If the gentleman had come to the Committee on Rules and said, "I have these affidavits, and I desire action," he would have had it, and he would have had it instantly. He would have been deprived of nothing whatever except the glory, whatever there was in it, of this fearful raid he has been making upon the Committee on Rules of this House.

I do not know who Mr. Evans is, and I never heard of him until within the last thirty minutes. I did not know there was such a man on God's footstool, nor did any member of the Committee on Rules know it, or ever hear of him, or ever hear that he had written a letter. The whole thing is simply a miscarriage because of the gentleman's failure to understand the processes by which this action could have been taken. The clerk of the committee has acted with absolute propriety. He is the custodian of the papers, that is all. And whenever the Committee on Rules had been invoked by the gentleman from Florida to take action the papers would have been produced at once and action would have been had.

Mr. RUCKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. As I understand, the gentleman has explained thus far why the Committee on Rules has not up to this time taken action—namely, that it had no knowledge of the serious character of these charges?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not said that.

Mr. RUCKER. That is the purport, as I understand it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. It is not the purport, either.

Mr. RUCKER. Then let me ask the gentleman this: Having now heard from the declarations of the gentlemen on the floor, will you, as a member of the committee, take this matter up in the committee and report to the House?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not take it up; no. But I will——

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman if the committee will take it up?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will come before the committee, the committee will act with absolute promptness.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] comes before the committee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And satisfies the committee that there is anything in these charges, then there will be no difficulty about action.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the committee will give me notice when they are going to meet, I will be there.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman can always find the Committee on Rules. There is never any trouble about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you see what has come of all this. The country has been lashed into a fury, when the whole of it is absolutely stolid ignorance of the processes by which action might have been had. The gentleman asked the Committee on Rules to take some affidavits, uncertified to by anybody as being competent, and act upon them. The committee certainly will not do that; the committee ought not to be asked to do that. If the gentleman's proposed action should be taken, why did he copy the originals and carry these copies and place them in the hands of the clerk of the committee?

I do not know that would have sufficed; but if the committee was to act in his absence—and that seems to be the burden of his cry, that we did not act in his absence—if he did not profess that, did he ever come and seek any action? He never has exhibited one of those affidavits to anybody connected with the committee. He simply sent what purports to be on their face copies of certain statements. Of course, there were charges made in the fall, early in the session, against this organization over here, and for one I sought to put in motion an investigation, and the gentleman from Florida put amendments into a bill which I had in hand, and the bill was passed with his amendment. Now, whatever became of that bill I do not know; I do not know whether the Senate shelved it or did not shelve it. I do not know anything about that. But I had heard as a current rumor, in the air, that some action had been taken by the board of managers, and there was little or nothing in the charges that had been made, and so I dropped following up that bill, and know nothing whatever about any attempt to investigate their action by the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman desire any further time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; that is all.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio is begging this whole question regarding an investigation by the House of Representatives of the mismanagement of St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum. His defense of the officials of that institution, to say the least, is disingenuous, and his reasons, as a member of the Committee on Rules, for not reporting the resolution for an investigation are hardly worth serious attention. This matter can not be whistled down the wind.

The charges and the statements made by the gentleman from Florida are not new and are not without substantial foundation in fact. They have been made over and over again by reputable citizens of the District of Columbia, in the newspapers of this city, and by several Members on the floor of this House; and the members of the Committee on Rules must have knowledge of these matters, and they should have taken action in the premises long ago by reporting this resolution for a rigid and impartial investigation without waiting for the introducer of the resolution or Members of the House to appear before the committee and beg the committee to do something.

Considering these grave charges, I say the delay in this matter on the part of the Committee on Rules is indefensible, and explanations only make the matter look worse. We know the practice of the Committee on Rules. Whenever it wants to do anything, it promptly does it, and does it in the most arbitrary and expeditious way; and whenever it does not want to do anything, nine-tenths of all the Members of this House can go to the Speaker's room day in and day out and plead and plead and use all their influence with every member of the committee and it is as impossible to get the Committee on Rules, if the committee does not want to do it, to do what a great majority of the Members of the House are anxious to have done as it is for the members of that committee to be translated. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a short time ago I made a speech on the floor of this House regarding the alleged cruelties and inhumanities that are going on, and have been going on for a long time, in St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum. I knew then, and I know now, whereof I speak. I said then, and I say now, that these grave charges should be investigated by a committee of the House of Representatives. I have in my possession copies of the same affidavits to which the gentleman from Florida has referred, and one of which he read to the House; and I have other information regarding the terrible stories which come to us about the inhuman and the barbarous treatment of the poor afflicted insane patients in that institution. These affidavits were prepared by Richard P. Evans, esq., attorney for the Medico-Legal Society of the District of Columbia. Mr. Evans is a well-known and prominent lawyer of the District of Columbia, and the Medico-Legal Society is one of the most reputable societies of its kind in this country.

These terrible accusations come to us from sincere, disinterested, and reputable citizens, and they will not down, and they can not be smothered or suppressed. If the statements are true, or only partially true, the condition of affairs in this asylum is a disgrace to the country; if they are false, a great injustice is being done to the officials of this institution, and the wrong should be remedied as soon as possible. The citizens of this city want an impartial investigation to get at the facts, and all the facts, and the only way that the people will ever know the truth, and the whole truth, and nothing but the truth is by a rigid investigation of this whole asylum administration by a nonpartisan Congressional committee. [Applause.]

The witnesses who make these frightful charges want to be heard, and they should be heard. The people demand this investigation, and it must come. The House of Representatives must do its duty, and do it now. The people expect us to act quickly in this matter and find out the truth. We should have an impartial investigation. Let in the light of publicity and get at all the facts.

If these charges of cruelty to the unfortunate patients in this asylum are true, the officials who are guilty of the barbarities should be criminally prosecuted. We demand the truth. We want publicity in this matter—no star-chamber proceedings, no whitewashing, no favoritism.

The gentleman from Ohio has ridiculed these charges, and in a facetious way has asked: "Where are the original affidavits?" I will answer the gentleman from Ohio, and say to him that Mr. Evans, the attorney for the Medico-Legal Society of the District of Columbia, informed me that the original affidavits were in a safe-deposit vault in this city, and if the gentleman wants to see the originals I suggest that he send for Mr. Evans, and I have no doubt Mr. Evans will produce the originals and show them to the gentleman from Ohio and give him other data and further information regarding the charges of graft and mismanagement and cruelties in St. Elizabeth's. The Medico-Legal Society of this District, I have no doubt, will produce all the proof necessary to convince the gentleman from Ohio that the conditions existing in St. Elizabeth's are a disgrace to the enlightened civilization of the twentieth century.

This Medico-Legal Society is composed of some of the most reputable and best-known physicians in this city, and they are familiar with the horrible conditions in St. Elizabeth's. These doctors and other reputable citizens have begged Congress for an investigation, and what answer did this House give to their appeal? It turned them away with a soft answer and said: "Go back to your homes; don't get excited; content your souls in peace; don't worry about the inhuman treatment of these poor lunatics over in St. Elizabeth's. We are looking after the matter, and we will let the officials of the institution investigate themselves, and when they bring in their report you can rest assured that these frightful charges of cruelty will be disproved and dissipated like mist before the rising sun." And I am informed the officials of the institution, taking their cue from the leaders in this House, are now investigating themselves. What a farce! What a spectacle is presented by these officials, charged with these barbarities, these cruelties, these inhumanities!

What a farce, I say, is presented to the people of the District of Columbia and to the country when the House of Representatives allows the very men charged with these offenses to investigate themselves and bring in a report whitewashing themselves. It is, indeed, to laugh. What a spectacle is presented when the Committee on Rules and the Committee on the District of Columbia refuse to give the members of the Medico-Legal Society and the reputable citizens of the District of Columbia an opportunity to prove their case and are told, as they are turned away: "Nothing can be done at present. We can not do anything for you. There will be no investigation by an impartial committee on the part of the House of Representatives. We know these officials out at St. Elizabeth. We do not believe these frightful accusations of cruelty and barbarism and inhumanity to the unfortunate insane. We have the most implicit confidence in the officials of the institution.

"We, or some of us, have been out there and looked over the whole situation. We have been wined and dined by the superintendent. We know what is going on, what he is doing, and we think he is all right, and everything else is all right; but in order to satisfy you and satisfy the people of the country, we are going to let these officials investigate themselves, and when their report comes in we have no doubt it will be a complete refutation of all these horrible stories." Wait for this whitewashing report. That will settle the matter. What a farce it all is. The country has had an exhibition of officials investigating themselves, and the difference between officials charged with mismanagement and other offenses investigating themselves and being investigated by an impartial committee. We know the whitewashing results of officials investigating themselves, and we know the sad and melancholy results of officials being investigated by impartial investigating committees. This investigation can not be suppressed by a wave of the hand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who does the gentleman say has been over to that asylum and been wined and dined?

Mr. SULZER. Members of this House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What Members of this House?

Mr. SULZER. I do not know their names, but they are Members of this House. I read it in the newspapers. I can easily ascertain the names if the gentleman is insistent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How do you know they were Members of this House?

Mr. SULZER. Because the papers said so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, there was a certain paper once said that a certain——

Mr. SULZER. Never mind what a certain paper once said. My recollection is they were members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they were over there very recently and treated sumptuously, and it was reported in all the newspapers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What has that got to do with this question?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman asked the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. How much further time does the gentleman from New York desire?

Mr. SULZER. Five or ten minutes more.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that it may or may not have a great deal to do with this question. We will find it out later on. But why does not the Committee on Rules take action on this resolution? That, after all, is the real question now before us. This Committee on Rules is a sort of a self-constituted affair; a one-man committee, with more power than all the other committees in the House.

I was asked my opinion about it the other day for a great Republican newspaper, the New York Tribune, and I promptly said, with all due respect to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who now occupies the chair, and with all due respect to my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who has endeavored to defend these officials and justify the nonaction of the committee—both members of this Committee on Rules—I said very frankly—and every Member here knows I was telling the truth—that the Committee on Rules was composed of one man, the Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That whatever he wanted the committee to do the committee would promptly do, and whatever he did not want that committee to do the committee would surely not do.

Now, I do not think that this resolution of investigation should have been referred to the Committee on Rules. It belongs to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Committee on the District of Columbia has this institution practically in charge, and there are a great many things in connection with it, outside of these cruelties, outside of this hocus-pocus business, by which the attorney for the institution goes into court and secures a writ de lunatico inquirendo, and the judge appoints his partner as the commissioner to take testimony as to the person's insanity, and one of the doctors of the institution is called, and another doctor who is, I am informed, a relative of the attorney, is called to examine the unfortunate patient and testify to the insanity; and between them they always find that the man is insane, and if he has any money they get the major portion of it for fees and services.

I have been told of cases where men have been sent to this asylum who were perfectly sane and rational, and lived there for years. Not soldiers nor sailors, but others. And it has been charged in some cases that people with money and other valuables in their possession were committed, and when they came out they could not get back a dollar, and in the opinion of some of these unlucky inmates it would be a good thing for the Committee on the District of Columbia to write over the gateway to the entrance to that insane asylum "Leave valuable goods behind, all ye who enter here." [Laughter.]

Recently I was told of a case where a poor woman from the District, a woman who was not insane, was sent to this institution, and she was fed by force through her nose, in a very cruel and inhuman way, without any reason or justification. The woman lives here in the District, and if this investigation is allowed I have no doubt this woman will be glad of an opportunity to appear and testify to the outrageous, the cruel, the inhuman, and the barbarous way she was treated.

Mr. Chairman, all experience, I think, teaches us that too much care can not be exercised over officials having the care and custody and treatment of the unfortunate insane. Years ago, I was a member of a legislative committee that investigated the conditions and treatment of the insane in the county institutions of the State of New York. In nearly every one of those county institutions—and I say it with great regret—the insane patients were treated cruelly and with a great deal of inhumanity, and a great many things were done which never should be allowed.

The consequence was that the report of this committee, when it came into the legislature, created suc a decided change in public opinion that the legislature promptly passed an act for the State care of the insane, and all these county insane patients were transferred to State institutions, and to-day, as the result of that law, all insane people in the State of New York are now sent to State asylums, where they are treated in the modern, up-to-date, scientific way—and with kindness, not cruelty—with humanity, not barbarism—and the result is——.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from New York five minutes more.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House but a few minutes longer. I hold in my hand a statement, which has been prepared by the attorney for the Medico-Legal Society, in regard to the expenditures for the farm at St. Elizabeth's and the value of the farm products. In the report of the board of visitors and the superintendent for the year 1905, relating to farm operations at St. Elizabeth's, they give, on pages 12 and 13, a table of the products of the farm, garden, hennery, and dairy, and place the value of the same at about $33,000. From all other sources $9,000, making about $42,000. The expenses of maintaining this farm are about $73,000 a year, leaving a deficiency from this one experiment of over $30,000.

I have no doubt, and others have no doubt who have looked into this matter, that, as far as the appropriations go to maintain the farm, the appropriations are accurate, but so far as the value of the products of the farm is concerned, it is entirely too high. As a matter of fact, there is a greater deficiency than $30,000 yearly in this one item.

Let us take, by way of comparison, the superintendent's report of the Central State Insane Hospital of Virginia, where they have a farm of about 500 acres, about the same size as this farm at St. Elizabeth's, and that farm shows a profit down in Virginia of over $4,000 a year. I desire to print in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, this statement regarding the discrepancy so far as this farm business is concerned.

This is a matter, Mr. Chairman, that should be looked into in the interest of economy. I think, as I said here a week or so ago, and repeat it now, that this is not a question that ought to be treated in an offhand way. This is not a question that ought to be treated as if the gentleman from Florida should continually be knocking at the door of the Committee on Rules. This is a great question of humanity, afflicted and unfortunate humanity. I say that any man, official or keeper or citizen, I care not who he is, that will illtreat a poor, unfortunate lunatic is a contemptible scoundrel, destitute of a spark of true humanity. Prison bars are none too good for the wretch. Let us have this investigation, and find out if there are any inhuman wretches in St. Elizabeth's. Nothing more and nothing less will satisfy the people.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing this statement in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is it the gentleman asks to print?

Mr. SULZER. It is a statement signed by the attorney of the Medico-Legal Society, Richard P. Evans, regarding the amount of money annually appropriated for the farm at St. Elizabeth's, and the amount of money, according to the report of the superintendent, that is realized from the value of the farm products.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If we are going into an investigation of this institution, would the gentleman regard that as evidence?

Mr. SULZER. I would not; but the facts can be proved.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What has the gentleman got to show that it is correct?

Mr. SULZER. The report of the superintendent, which shows exactly how much money is appropriated for this farm and how much is derived from it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We know what that is without that statement.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; so much the better. Then this statement of the officials of that institution as to how much money is annually appropriated for this farm and how much is derived from the products of the farm will do no harm to anyone if printed in the RECORD. It shows a deficiency of about $30,000. I shall put it in the RECORD to show the deficiency.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And yet the gentleman says he would not consider it as evidence.

Mr. SULZER. I would not, if I were trying a case. I am not putting it in the RECORD as evidence, I am putting it in the RECORD to show exactly how much money is appropriated every year for the farm at the asylum and how much money, according to the statement of the officials, is derived from the products of the farm.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And the gentleman wants people to infer that they ought to make good the difference between the appropriation and the value of the proceeds?

Mr. SULZER. I do not want anybody to infer anything of the kind. I am putting this data in the RECORD because in other States where there are farms connected with these insane institutions the farms pay for themselves, but in this institution there is a deficiency of over $30,000 a year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That involves several factors; it involves the kind and condition and quality of the soil.

Mr. SULZER. It involves the question of intelligent and honest management.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman think that the Maryland soil of red clay will produce much of anything in the way of agriculture?

Mr. SULZER. Oh, yes; I have seen the Maryland soil produce good crops season after season.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The kind of soil that there is out there at St. Elizabeth's?

Mr. SULZER. I don't pretend to be as familiar with soil as the gentleman from Ohio, but my idea is that the soil of Virginia and Maryland and here in the District is very much the same.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, well, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. SULZER. No, I am not; nor about other things going on at St. Elizabeth's.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ST. ELIZABETH.

Farm products and expenditures, 1905.

The report of the board of visitors and superintendent for the year 1905, relating to the farming operations at St. Elizabeth, gives the following information and apparent results:

On pages 12 and 13 appear a list of table and farm products from the farm and garden, which include dairy, hennery, etc., but which does not state the cash values of the same. From best information, figuring on a basis midway between wholesale and retail prices, so far as obtained, it appears that the following is a liberal estimate of value of the products to the hospital:

VALUE OF PRODUCTS.

Table products from farm, garden, dairy, hennery, etc	$33,893.00
Feed products (hay, fodder, ensilage, etc.—1,128 tons)	9,425.00
Total estimated value of products	43,318.00

EXPENDITURES (P. 30 OF REPORT).

Expended on farm (garden and stable)	$27,287.01
Expended on wages (farm and garden, hauling, etc.)	46,529.08
Total expended	73,816.09
Deficiency in value of products to balance	30,498.09

NOTE.—The report of Dr. William F. Drewry, superintendent of the Central State Hospital of Virginia (Petersburg), for 1905 shows a profit of $4,358.79 from a 500-acre farm (same size).

Comment might be made upon the fact that while the report (p. 11) shows an average of about 225 head of stock (cows, horses, and mules on farm), and that 1,128 tons of hay, fodder, etc., was raised, there was also expended (p. 30) $12,204 for feed and $8,866.71 for hay and straw—a cash expenditure of $21,070.71; this amount added to the value of the feed products—$9,425—makes a total cost of $30,495.71 for feed and bedding of 225 head of stock, an average of $135.58 per head per annum, or $11.29 per month. The average cost for horse feed in the city appears to be about $90 per annum, or $7.50 per month, with no assistance from pasturage. At this average cost of $11.29 per month at St. Elizabeth is included about 160 cows, whose feed cost is considerably less than that of horses.

To the "stable" cost should be added the expenses of several electric vehicles, kept for the accommodation of the officials of the institution, one of which is said to have cost $2,500. The repairing of these autos is said to make quite an item of expense.

It appears that some fifteen hands are regularly employed on farm, garden, etc., at an average of $20 per month and "found."

A number of the assistant physicians and others, it is stated, have their families, nurses, etc., with fine suites of rooms and separate tables. The report of the board of visitors does not appear to indicate whether these families are entertained at the hospital expense or otherwise provided for. There may be an unnoticed provision of law authorizing such entertainment and support.

The report of the board of visitors requests further appropriations for new cow stable, piggery, etc. (p. 29), amounting to $51,080; new entrance and gate house, $8,600; new iron fence, $14,900; new assembly hall, $90,000; a total of $164,580; also other sums for improvements. These are undoubtedly all worthy of consideration, but it is questionable whether they should take precedence of provision for more nurses and attendants, at less hours of labor and increased compensation, looking to better care and treatment of the patients, to whom considerable additions seems to be anticipated (p. 26).

There does appear opportunity for large economy in some lines of administrative detail, and application of the saving to better conditions for the attendants and employees and the insane patients.

RICHARD P. EVANS,
Attorney at Law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that that very distinguished committee which controls the proceedings of this body, the Committe on Rules, will be surprised to see rising from among the hosts of Baal, if they choose to call us such, a champion, however feeble and inefficient; but I want to say on behalf of that committee that it is just as consistent, just as liberal, in matters of legislation as the party which it represents will permit it to be, and that it is the most brilliantly and at times humorously inconsistent body of men that ever got together on the face of this earth. I wish now to divert the attention of this body from the consideration of the pauper and criminally insane (the committee having just heard the speeches of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] on the management of St. Elizabeth's Asylum) to a consideration of the criminally neglectful and unmindful—the Republican party in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses.

Recently a farmer member of a Southern State legislature, after continuously attending the sessions of that honorable body and listening in silence to the expressions of wisdom and patriotism of his associates, arose to address the assembly on a subject of great interest to him. His colleagues refused to listen, and the speaker indifferently failed to preserve order. The member grew indignant and said:

Mr. Speaker, for two months I have sat here silently and listened patiently to whirlwinds of eloquence and tornadoes of oratory from others, and now I'll be d—d if I don't want you fellows to give attention while I talk some myself.

A sense of propriety and a knowledge of the futility of much speaking here has prevented me from often imposing my views on this House, but I respectfully ask the attention of this assembly while I briefly discuss—

THE FAILURE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TO REDEEM ITS PLEDGES MADE TO THE PUBLIC.

For many years it has been the boast of Republicans that the party to which they belonged was an aggressive, active organization, not a mere party of negation. It has been repeatedly asserted here that the Republican party is peculiarly fitted by experience to govern the affairs of this great nation; that its leaders are men of such preeminent wisdom and learning as to inspire public confidence. Every blessing which the providence of God has bestowed upon our country has been declared the direct result of your party policies, Mr. Chairman, and of its Administrations, while the misfortunes that have come in the course of our country's progress you have magnanimously attributed to the wickedness and foolishness of the Democratic party. If in the past you have governed liberally and well, my sense of patriotism would not permit me knowingly to withhold the credit which may be due you as a party. For, let us hope, the welfare of the public and the glory of the Republic is, and must ever be, paramount to the fame of individuals and the renown of organizations. It is not my purpose now to attempt a review of the many mistakes which the Republican party has made during the past save to show from the record made in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses that this machine, intrusted with the control of every branch of the Government, has failed and now refuses to do what it has repeatedly promised, and what it unquestionably has the power to accomplish if it chooses.

On every matter involving questions of great importance your attitude, gentlemen of the majority, has been that of weakness, indetermination, vacillation. Although pledged to many reforms in the public interest, has been enacted during the Fifty-eighth Congress and that period of the present Congress which has passed. The majority seems not to have addressed itself to the subject "how to do it," but rather to the inquiry "how to seem to do it and yet leave everything important unfinished." In all the political history of the country this record for incompetence can not be excelled.

NOT A SINGLE EFFECTIVE MEASURE OF GENERAL IMPORTANCE

The machine in this body is all-powerful. It can make and unmake, do and undo. Under the rules prevailing here consideration can not be had of any measure without the approval of the Committee on Rules or the consent of the very amiable and able gentleman who, fortunately for the country, wields the gavel so impartially—at times. Legislation of vital importance dies in the committee rooms or goes to sleep forever on the Calendars. I am perfectly aware of the futility of these oft-repeated attacks upon the rules. I know that the responsibility is upon the majority for legislation enacted or defeated here. But in all earnestness, considering the Congress as a whole, what has been accomplished of general and great importance to the country either in this Congress or the last? If we are fortunate and good, we secure recognition for unanimous consent for the consideration of local bills and measures of trivial importance, but no important bill is ever discussed here until a few gentlemen have determined whether it shall pass and in what form. Then, with a show of magnanimity, the House is given several hours, or perhaps several days, in which to debate it, and with assinine humility we assume the ponderous task of discussing a measure when its fate is predetermined and universally known among us, when we all understand that neither the wisdom of Solomon nor the eloquence of Demosthenes, nor both combined, could affect the final result.

There was a time when this Chamber was the great forum of national debate and political controversy, when the champions of contending factions and parties met here and fought out great questions confronting the Government. These battles, fought hand to hand and face to face in the open, promoted the intelligence and welfare of the country at large and intrenched the membership of this body in the affections of all American citizens. Now our proceedings present the anomaly of never permitting debate over real controversies. The real issues here are determined behind closed doors, in committee rooms, or at secret conferences, where, to say the least, the public interest is subsidiary to considerations of political expediency. The live question before the majority now is not "how to do anything," but "how not to do it," and yet make believe that you have.

Far to the west, in the glow that gilds the broad expanse of beautiful prairies, lie the domains of Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

YOU PROMISED TO GIVE THEM STATEHOOD.

Did you not? Why have you not done so? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Every Member of this body and almost every member of the Senate agrees that these two Territories should be admitted to the Union as a State. Nobody objects to it; everyone wants it. In population, in commercial enterprise and activity, in every material respect, they meet the full standard of statehood. Year after year they have knocked at the doors of Congress and asked admission to the Union. The citizens of these Territories have earned in the good, old-fashioned way the right to a place among the States. They have converted the plains into fertile fields and founded prosperous cities. They have maintained order and attained social refinement under great disadvantages. The right of Oklahoma and Indian Territory to admission, their fitness to become a State, in no wise depend upon Arizona and New Mexico. Why couple a proposition that all indorse with one that many oppose? Why make the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory dependent upon the admission of Arizona and New Mexico? For political and sectional purposes, without right or reason, you have withheld statehood from Oklahoma because Arizona does not want to be united with New Mexico. Why not keep your pledge and admit Oklahoma and Indian Territory now? The people there feel that they are entitled to this consideration. You promised it to them. They are not responsible for the attitude of Arizona toward New Mexico. Can it be, Mr. Speaker, that your party will persistently attempt to coerce the consciences of gentlemen here and in the Senate by refusing to do what you and everyone else knows to be right in order to compel some one to do wrong?

A few moments ago the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] criticised the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] for not coming before the Committee on Rules and asking action on his resolution to investigate St. Elizabeth's Asylum. Strangely consistent in its inconsistency, that committee should remember that for months and years citizens of the Territories of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory have been coming before that committee and begging them to bring in a rule to let us make one new State at least in this Republic, and they have refused to do it. The result is the same, whether you will or not and whatever one does. There is an iron band bound around the proceedings of this committee, and no matter how much ability a Member here may possess, no matter how much conscience he may have to serve his country, he can not do anything unless he gets the eye of the very able gentleman who cracks the whip above the backs of the majority of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What power, I ask, has disregarded public opinion, overridden official conscience, and denied statehood to Oklahoma and Indian Territory? Will any gentleman answer? Why not, I repeat, admit Oklahoma and Indian Territory and fight it out over Arizona and New Mexico? Is that not the fair course to pursue? Is it not the rational course?

Mr. Speaker, I can see but one possible reason for longer denying statehood to Oklahoma and Indian Territory. So long as a Territorial government is maintained there, Federal officers will have to be appointed to administer the government, and some one will dictate or suggest those appointments. But considerations of this nature can not influence Representatives in Congress or Senators! Besides, Mr. Speaker, your supply of available Rough Riders, I am informed, is about exhausted!

Seriously, no one can justify a longer delay in this matter. It is an injustice to the citizenship of two great Territories who look to this Congress for statehood. Have they not the right to expect that you will keep your promise.

Not only has the majority failed, so far, to keep its pledge as to statehood, but it has met with signal and

HOPELESS FAILURE IN THE DEFEAT OF THE PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The President and the Secretary of War, who assumes to act as foster father to all the Filipinos, treated this measure as of great importance. They kept pressing the matter until finally a bill was reported which the majority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] supported with zeal, as did the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The latter, with other Democrats, favored the measure, I think, because they regarded it as a recognition of the Democratic doctrine on the subject, and a substantial "step in the right direction." The gentleman from New York supported the measure, I think, because it would not, in his opinion, lessen the price to the consumer, but would probably cheapen the cost of raw material to the manufacturer. In any event, the measure was brought into the House under a rule that made amendment impossible, after its provisions had been agreed on in the committee, and it was thein passed with a flourish of trumphets, after a "long and interesting debate." But what pitfalls line the pathway of seeming triumph! Loving hands bore it tenderly to the other end of this Capitol and committed it to the keeping of its enemies, who pumped its frail form full of dope, and in the monotony of a never-ending debate on the rate bill, rocked it to sleep—eternal sleep; while the President, in bitter disappointment, leaned his head on the delicate shoulder of the Secretary of War, and wept aloud at the failure of his plans because of his party's refusal to do his bidding.

Yet might not the result have been foreseen? The most inconsistent of individuals sometimes esteems the quality of consistency in others above all other virtues. For many years you have had a "white elephant" on hand in the form of the Philippine Islands. You have never had the courage, as a party, to tell the world, to inform the people of the United States, whether you intend to retain these islands permanently, grant them independence, or to announce what policy you will pursue in regard to them. Manifestly, if they are to become or remain a part or possession of the United States, you ought to remove all tariff restraints on trade with them. On the other hand, if you intend to give them independence, you would perhaps be under no such obligation. The defeat of the Philippine tariff bill is the natural result of your inconsistency, as a party, on the Philippine question. Yet all the while you are expending vast sums for military purposes and kindred objects in various portions of the archipelago, thus tying them closer and closer to the United States. For my part I believe that these islands have already cost the United States more blood and more money than they can ever yield. Speaking for myself, I would not give one drop of the blood of a brave American boy meeting his death on the spear of a Filipino savage, as thousands of them have done and many will yet do—I would not give one cry of anguish from the heart of his mother as they brought back dead her boy and laid him at her feet, for the whole archipelago! It's a sorry business, this governing oriental savages. Tell the people what you are going to do about it. Let them know what you believe should be done. Understand this: So long as there is a boy there, wearing the uniform of my country and following its flag, my voice and my vote will be heard and cast in supplying him with all the necessities of life! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Not only has the Republican party broken its pledge on statehood and suffered an ignominious defeat of the Philippine tariff bill, but it has persistently failed and refused to revise the tariff. In the beginning of his Administration the President announced his purpose to consummate the policy inaugurated by President McKinley. It was decreed that the old order of things had passed away; that schedules must be adjusted to meet the ever-changing conditions of this country and our relations in trade matters with foreign countries. During the first two sessions of the Fifty-eighth Congress we grew familiar with the term "tariff revision" on that side of the House, although it was frequently coupled with the limitation, "tariff revision by the friends of the tariff." From a Republican leader in Iowa—stalwart, if insurgent—came the cry, "Reciprocity and tariff reform!" And the call was heard and echoed back from New England. The President's views on the matter were well and generally known. The press discussed his attitude, and declared that it was his purpose to force consideration of tariff revision on Congress. "Ah, then and there was hurrying to and fro!" Day and night messengers sped from this Hall to the White House. Frequent conferences were held. The result we all know. For the time being, in order to secure the enactment of what the President deemed more necessary legislation in railroad rate regulation, for the sake of unity and in a spirit of harmony, tariff revision was displaced. Not a word on the subject in the President's message to this Congress. Nearly five months of the present session have passed. Already we have piled up in the Senate enough work to keep that slow-going body busy until the middle of June.

Shall we look for a message from the President recommending tariff revision just before this session closes, or will he wait until after the November election? We all know that such legislation will not be seriously considered now. But out in the country districts of many gentlemen who sit on that side of the Chamber is gathering a storm of wrath which will break in fury above their heads and make impossible their reelection next November if some word of promise be not held out by the Administration that the tariff shall be reformed. I understand perfectly well that the greater number of the majority in this House does not favor tariff revision. They subscribe to the doctrine "stand pat." "Let well enough alone." But the American people believe in progress. They have observed the strained relations existing between China and the United States on account of trade relations and other conditions. They have heard the threats of Germany and Russia and other European powers to retaliate against us for alleged wrongs imposed by existing schedules. Still Republicans here worship the Dingley rates as if they were of divine origin, and speak of Providence as a junior partner with the Republican party in bestowing mercy and blessings on the American people.

EXTRA SESSION TO BE CALLED FOR TARIFF REVISION NEXT YEAR.

The New York Press of the 18th (yesterday) contained a long article in its first column, sent out from this city, in which it is asserted that the President has decided to call an extra session of Congress soon after March 4 to consider tariff revision. If this statement is well founded, it is apparent that this promise is to be used as an inducement to Republicans who favor and deem necessary tariff revision to continue their support of that organization. When the November election has been held and the strength of revisionists has been definitely ascertained, we will see what will happen.

No substantial revision of the tariff will be made by the Republican party. Its leaders here are opposed to such action. It would be impossible to pass through this body a measure of this kind over their opposition. But the promise to revise the tariff may again serve its purpose. It may help the majority to fight its battles in the coming election. Is there a gentleman here who professes faith in the purpose of the Republican party to materially revise the tariff? It is but another promise made to be broken. I publish the article referred to in the New York Press:

EXTRA SESSION WILL BE CALLED FOR TARIFF REVISION NEXT YEAR—ROOSEVELT GIVES INTEREST TO FALL ELECTIONS BY MAPPING OUT WORK TO BE UNDERTAKEN SOON AFTER MARCH 4—INHERITANCE TAX PUTS FORAKER IN OPPOSITION—PRESIDENT PREPARING NEW NATIONAL PLATFORM FOR REPUBLICAN PARTY IN 1908 TO INCLUDE WIDER FEDERAL CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS DOING AN INTERSTATE BUSINESS.

[From the regular correspondent of the Press.]

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1906.

What is perceived to be the outline of a new national platform for the Republican party is being formulated by President Roosevelt and his Administration advisers. It had been the President's intention to refrain from discussing his new policies until after the enactment of traffic rate regulation, fearful that if public attention were diverted from concentration on this mandatory legislation the effort to obtain a remedial law would suffer and perhaps fail. Confident now, however, that this cause is won and that all remaining to be done is to frame the rate bill in the exact phraseology in which it will be enacted, the President and his advisers are looking ahead and planning for further successes.

Expressions of prominent individuals who have talked with the President recently indicate the chief planks which the doughty Roosevelt is striving to hew into proper form for presentation and indorsement. It is known, of course, that he intends to enlarge legislation for the Government regulation of all corporations carrying on interstate business. His plan relative to a suggested income or inheritance tax is yet in embryo, as also are several other ideas which he is cogitating. Tariff revisionists, however, who have talked with the President confidentially, are emphatic in their statement that the President is again squinting toward revision, and has a plan under serious consideration, if not already decided on, in this connection.

EXTRA SESSION TO CUT TARIFF.

They say he has given assurances that while he agrees with the stand-pat advocates that the tariff issue should not be brought into this year's Congress campaign, to divide Republican strength, after a new Republican Congress is elected, which he believes is assured with proper management of the campaign, and after the present Congress shall expire on March 4, next, he will call an extra session, to which he will recommend thorough consideration of the tariff schedules before the national campaign opens. While it is understood the extra session will be called for tariff revision especially, other questions may be suggested to Congress at that time. There seems to be no doubt that the men who ask for tariff revision have obtained a distinct pledge from the President. He has promised an extra session, and has indicated that the stand-pat doctrine must be modified.

To the party at large nothing which has come from the White House recently can be of more vital interest than the statement that the President favors tariff revision next year. Revisionists stick to this statement, and say that is the only assurance which will keep them quiet on the tariff question in the coming campaign. They have agreed, it is said, to work in harmony with the Republican Congress committee on the campaign, and this committee in turn is represented as desiring to work in cooperation with the American Protective Tariff League in the distribution of tariff literature and other Republican doctrine. Evidences accumulate, however, that there will be many a sharp contest over the nominations for Congress in districts where it is asserted sentiment of tariff revision exists.

ARDENT REVISION CAMPAIGN.

Revisionists everywhere are seeking to gain as many nominations as possible for their advocates, so that when the extra session of the new Congress is called next year they will have a better representation than at present. It is ventured by stand-pat believers that the programme as outlined by the President and his advisers, if correctly stated above, is fraught with great danger, and also suggests the companion character to the "man with the muck rake"—"Mr. Facing Bothways."

They point out that if the Republican party is for the maintenance of the Dingley protective tariff law there should be no quibbling or bargaining with revisionists. On the other hand, they say if the sentiment of the party is for tariff revision it should begin immediately, without procrastination or any attempt to deceive the people.

Whether Mr. Roosevelt shall be renominated as a candidate for the Presidency again or not it is evident to all politicians that he has undertaken to write and prepare his party's platform for 1908. There are many misgivings as to the result. It is suggested by prominent, experienced politicians that the best time to write the national platform would be when the national convention of the party assembles two years hence. One of the first contests over party issues and policies will come in the Ohio State convention.

Senator FORAKER to-day wired his opposition to the proposed inheritance and income tax of his party's national leader. Ohio also is strongly for protection.

With its pledge on statehood unfulfilled, its Philippine tariff bill dead in the Senate, its promise to revise the tariff shelved, this party which boasts of past triumphs only has further demonstrated its unfitness to govern by

LACK OF EXECUTIVE ABILITY AND MISMANAGEMENT IN THE AFFAIRS OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

This is an enterprise of such vast importance to the commerce and military power of the United States that all Democrats and Republicans should unite in sincere efforts to speedily consummate it. After four hundred years of interrupted but repeated enterprises on the part of various nations to construct the canal, the world was made to think, when our Government undertook the task of constructing the canal, that within a few years it would be open to the commerce. Never were the American people more universally in favor of any project. Never were they more united in a hearty wish to see any purpose accomplished. It must be admitted that the task is a great one, and that it presents scientific difficulties not readily discerned by the unskilled, that climatic conditions and labor troubles there have added to the embarrassments naturally incident to so great an undertaking; but if the Administration had been trying not to build the canal it could not have succeeded better. Millions of dollars expended and no definite conclusion yet reached as to the kind of canal to be constructed.

The Commission that reported, recommending the Panama route as the most practical, said that one year would be required for preparation, and five years, certainly not more than ten, for completion. Two years have elapsed since the ratification of the treaty, and still the work of preparation goes on. Little actual work has been done. Everything seems to be in confusion. It is evident that some changes must be made in the administration of affairs on the Isthmus. It was unfair in the beginning to impose the task of overseeing this work upon the President. His duties are certainly numerous and burdensome enough already. But, in my humble judgment, until some master spirit be chosen and intrusted with the responsibility in the construction of this canal, the work will never be completed. If it requires three years to decide upon whether the canal shall be a sea-level or a lock and dam canal, it will probably require fifty years to complete it. By good management, I believe, it will take fifteen years to open up this canal to commerce. This is, of course, but a rough estimate. These delays that have occurred have been calculated to discredit the undertaking in the mind of the public. There are many railroads in this country, having interests which might be detrimentally affected by the construction of the Panama Canal, which desire to beget distrust in the public mind and cause the project to be abandoned. But this canal must be built. Built as quickly and as cheaply as possibly, but whether it costs much or little, whether it takes a decade or a quarter of a century, it must be completed. The public interest demands it.

The expenditure of vast sums will be legitimately required. Democrats will cooperate with Republicans in suppressing extravagant and useless appropriations. The sum required to complete this great work will exceed, I fear, by many million dollars the greatest amount now estimated. With the citizenship of the entire country indorsing and supporting the enterprise, with both parties united in an earnest effort to open to the commerce of all the world this great canal, may we not hope that a quickening of the officials in charge will cause a prompt fulfillment of our promise to provide this great waterway between North and South America?

Determined, it seems, to maintain throughout the Congress its record for inefficiency, the Republican party has not only violated its pledge to give statehood to Oklahoma and Indian Territory, Arizona and New Mexico, suffered helpless defeat of the Philippine tariff, refused to revise the general tariff schedules, mismanaged the construction of the Panama Canal, and wasted millions of dollars of public treasure, but, with singular consistency for incompetence,

THE ADMINISTRATION HAS FAILED TO PASS ITS PET MEASURE, THE RATE BILL.

The paramount issue before the Fifty-eighth Congress was the so-called "rate bill." After much consideration this body passed the Townsend-Esch bill, which was understood to embody the principles indorsed by the President, and sent the measure over to the Senate, where it was promptly and with all due ceremony buried beneath mountains of "unlimited debate."

In the early days of the present session we were told that an effective measure extending the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and authorizing that body to fix rates under certain conditions to remain in force until declared to be unjust or unreasonable by a court of competent jurisdiction upon final hearing, would find easy passage through the Congress. Accordingly we submitted to a rule which forbade amendments, and with our usual credulity believed all we were told. Notwithstanding the bill has been before the Senate for many months, that great body is slowly crucifying it between "limited and unlimited court review" on the one hand, and "jurisdiction and judicial power" on the other. The country anxiously awaits the issue. What its determination will be no tongue can tell. "Prophets may prophesy and captives pray;" autocracy mocks at them all and, surrounded by its instruments of power, bids defiance to public weal or will.

The Constitution, designed to be a bulwark of liberty behind which an oppressed people might entrench and defend themselves against the aggressions of tyrannical power, is invoked by learned and able lawyers throughout the country and elsewhere representing the railroads to defeat this legislation.

Sir, I do not claim to be a constitutional lawyer in the sense of the term as now commonly applied. I hope I may be pardoned for suggesting that gentlemen truly eminent and devoted to their profession do not need to assert their devotion to the principles of our national Constitution which they have sworn to support. If to be a "constitutional lawyer" means that one must espouse unjust causes and apply hair-splitting distinctions to the detriment of the public, I confess I do not desire the appellation. But if to be a constitutional lawyer means a lawyer diligent and studious in his profession, who professes and has, in fact, firm and unshaken confidence in the fundamental principles of his Government and the great instrument expressing them; who believes that the public, yielding a part of its sovereignty to a corporation, does not so divest itself of power as to become unable to direct and control its creatures and prevent injustice and abuse; if to be a constitutional lawyer means one who, possessing an enduring faith in the perpetuity of republican government, the patriotism of American citizenship, would not invoke technicalities to defeat the ends and aims of justice, then, sir, I might humbly hope to claim that proud distinction. With rare diplomacy and admirable skill, with magic words and witch-like methods, the greatest legal talent in this country has been bought by transportation corporations with a view of finding some defect in the statute we may enact and in the end defeating the purposes of our deliberations. It behooves us to be careful; yet we must also be aggressive.

The public has suffered long and patiently at the hands of its own creatures. It now demands redress of wrongs, remedies that will prove effective and complete. The railroads have made the singular mistake of conceiving that it is really no part of the public's business what they charge, or how, for transportation. They have disregarded the primary consideration that they, by public grace, are exercising public functions and must be fair and impartial in their operations. Willful and often repeated violations of law, committed in a spirit of open or covert defiance, has brought about the necessity and demand for this legislation. The public will not be deceived. No makeshift, no ineffective compromise can or ought to be accepted. The battle is now on. The citizens of this country are enlisted heart and soul. Are we in earnest? Do we mean to stand for the right as our consciences command, or shall we avert the continuance of the conflict by accepting an amendment to the House bill which will give substantial victory to the railroads? The contest is already long drawn out. It remains to be seen whether this House will yield to the Senate when the Senate is wrong, or whether it will stand firm for the rights of the people, whom we assume to represent.

In the Senate, gentlemen of the majority, your leaders have styled rate regulation legislation as Democratic in principle. In order to avoid responsibility for results they have manifested a willingness to yield the glory of a promised victory to their political antagonists. For my part, heartily indorsing and approving those declarations in favor of this legislation contained in the national platforms of my party, I am willing to bear my share of the responsibility attaching to this legislation. My only fear is that cunning and intrigue will work so effectively against the cause of the people in this matter that in the end we will "give them a stone for bread, and a serpent for fish." [Applause on Democratic side.]

There are yet other important particulars in which the party in power has disappointed the country. With the Dingley rates still in force, you have so lavishly and extravagantly expended the public moneys that an appropriation for public buildings has been held back.

I sincerely hope that it will be found practical and consistent to pass a reasonable omnibus buildings bill at the present session, and thus evidence to the country the readiness and willingness of the Government to conserve the general welfare. Have we millions for fortifying island possessions and not a dollar for adding to the comfort of our own citizens in building suitable court-houses and post-office buildings?

Moreover, gentlemen of the majority, you profess to be the friend and champion of organized labor. Have you not totally failed and refused to recognize the demands of organized labor throughout the Fifty-eighth Congress and up till the present?

What legislation of general importance have you passed or tried to enact in the interest of labor? On this subject, as on many others, you have either intentionally refused to comply with any petition of organized labor, or you have been so hopelessly divided that you dared not undertake to consider and discuss important issues relating to this subject. Dozens of bills indorsed by labor organizations and vital in importance you have denied consideration. And yet, is not labor entitled to its fair reward? Does its strength not support all our institutions? What has it not done for the progress and betterment of mankind? In the language of another:

> Who can adequately describe the triumphs of labor urged on by the potent spell of profit? It has extorted the secrets of the universe and trained its myriad powers into forms of use and beauty. From the bosom of the old creation it has developed anew the creation of industry and of art. It has been its delight and its task to overcome obstacles. Mountains have been leveled and valleys have been exalted before it. It has broken the rocky soil into the fertile glade, crowned the hilltops with verdure, and bound round the feet of ocean ridges of golden corn. Up from the sunless and hoary deeps it drags its spotless marbles and rears its palaces of pomp. It marches steadily on over the swelling flood and through the mountain clefts. It fans its way through the winds of ocean, tramples them in its course, surges and mingles them with flakes of fire. Civilization follows in its pathway. It achieves grander victories, weaves more durable trophies than the conqueror. His name becomes tainted and his monuments crumble, but labor converts his red battlefields into gardens and erects monuments significant of better things. It rides in a chariot driven by the wind. It writes with the lightning. It sits crowned as a queen in a thousand cities and sends up its roar of triumph from a million wheels. It glistens in the glossy fabric of the loom, rings and sparkles in the steely hammer. It glories in shapes of beauty and speaks in words of power. It makes the sinewy arm invincible with might, the poor man's heart rich with content, and crowns the swarthy, sweaty brow with dignity, with honor, and with peace.

[Applause on Democratic side.]

It appears from the record the Republican party has made that it has added to its many other violated pledges the crime of continued disregard of the appeals and entreaties of those who toil. What, I repeat, has it accomplished?

The Administration has been unfortunate in its prosecutions under the antitrust law. In the great Northern Securities suit it was the means of enriching those who had violated the law. It failed to prosecute these violations of law.

It undertook to prosecute the packers for repeated offenses against the antitrust statutes. The court held them immune from prosecution because an agent of the Government in the discharge of his duties had obtained information which was voluntarily furnished by the packers or their agents. Certainly the Administration is not to blame for this decision. It is merely unfortunate. The able and efficient Attorney-General was mortified at the decision, and the President indorsed his opinion of the case. His message to this body on yesterday leaves no mind uncertain as to what are his views on this subject. Among other things, he said:

> In offenses of this kind it is at the best hard enough to execute justice upon offenders. Our system of criminal jurisprudence has descended to us from a period when the danger was lest the accused should not have his rights adequately preserved, and it is admirably framed to meet this danger. But at present the danger is just the reverse—that is, the danger nowadays is not that the innocent man will be convicted of crime, but that the guilty man will go scot-free. This is especially the case where the crime is one of greed and cunning perpetrated by a man of great wealth in the course of those business operations where the code of conduct is at variance not merely with the code of humanity and morality, but with the code as established in the law of the land. It is much easier, but much less effective, to proceed against a corporation than to proceed against the individuals in that corporation who are themselves responsible for the wrongdoing. Very naturally outside persons, who have no knowledge of the facts and no responsibility for the success of the proceedings, are apt to clamor for action against the individuals. The Department of Justice has, most wisely, invariably refused thus to proceed against individuals, unless it was convinced both that they were in fact guilty and that there was at least a reasonable chance of establishing this fact of their guilt. These beef-packing cases offered one of the very few instances where there was not only the moral certainty that the accused men were guilty, but what seemed, and now seems, sufficient legal evidence of the fact.
> But in obedience to the explicit order of the Congress the Commissioner of Corporations had investigated the beef-packing business. The counsel for the beef packers explicitly admitted that there was no claim that any promise of immunity had been given by Mr. Garfield, as shown by the following colloquy during the argument of the Attorney-General:
> "Mr. MOODY. * * * I dismiss almost with a word the claim that Mr. Garfield promised immunity. Whether there is any evidence of such a promise or not I do not know and I do not care.
> "Mr. MILLER (the counsel for the beef packers). There is no claim of it.
> "Mr. MOODY. Then I was mistaken, and I will not even say that word."
> But Judge Humphrey holds that if the Commissioner of Corporations (and therefore if the Interstate Commerce Commission) in the course of any investigations prescribed by Congress asks any questions of a person not called as a witness, or asks any questions of an officer of a corporation not called as a witness, with regard to the action of the corporation on a subject out of which prosecutions may subsequently arise, then the fact of such questions having been asked operates as a bar to the prosecution of that person or of that officer of the corporation for his own misdeeds. Such interpretation of the law comes measureably near making the law a farce; and I therefore recommend that the Congress pass a declaratory act stating its real intention.

Your party, Mr. Chairman, by every test has been found wanting. It has become a negative organization, torn and distracted by factions, and is either unwilling or afraid to carry out its policies. Many solemn pledges it has openly violated. It has failed to keep its most sacred obligations. It yet has the opportunity to keep faith with the country. The hour has arrived when Republicans must make good their promises to enact important legislation or suffer overwhelming defeat next November. Our people, without regard to party lines, are patriotic. They love the institutions founded by our fathers. They are devoted to the principles of government which make them free. This is a common ground on which we all may meet. Confessing my own ignorance, but professing sincere faith in the courage, the allegiance to conscience of my associates in this Chamber, I look forward to an early day when the public may realize their hopes in the fulfillment of the promises made to them; when Oklahoma and Indian Territory shall be crowned with the full glory of statehood; when justice shall be meted out to the Philippines; when every thief shall be scourged from the temple; when the railroads shall be made to recognize the equal rights of all the citizens who created them; when tariff schedules shall be so readjusted as to meet every reasonable demand for revenue, but not repel and antagonize foreign governments with whom we trade; when toil shall have full recompense, and honesty its just reward. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WANGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, the announcement of the Speaker's signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title was received:

S. R. 48. Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, during the long session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, approaching as we were our last Presidential and Congressional election, the distinguished leader of the majority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], said, in this House, in substance, that he was "too smart to meddle with the tariff approaching an election," although the Democrats were then, as now, urging the Republicans to reform the tariff. A few days ago the same gentleman, speaking for his party, again gave in substance the same excuse for deferring tariff legislation, and close behind him the distinguished Speaker of this House, in a published letter, took the same position and said, in effect, if not literally, that if the people wanted tariff reform they could elect a Democratic House.

I was not aware that any tariff was made to perpetuate any party in power. I have always understood that our Constitution and our laws were made for the benefit of our people—our forefathers and their posterity.

By the very words of the Constitution the fathers declared that sacred instrument was, in part, ordained to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." But nowhere do I read that the Constitution or our tariff laws say they were framed to continue in power either the Republican or the Democratic or any other party. But it seems in this day of frenzied finance and of frenzied party duty that a different construction is placed upon the Constitution and our tariff laws by the Republican party.

The present tariff was enacted in 1897. Later its rates were raised because of the Spanish war under the usual promise that this Spanish war tax would be "temporary," but in the main it has remained permanent. This tariff is, then, nine years old. It has existed and remained fixed amidst rapid changes in economic, public, and private conditions. Always oppressive, it has grown so burdensome and its offspring, the trusts, have become so gigantic and dangerous, that the people demand "justice," they demand "domestic tranquillity," they demand that the "blessings of liberty" be secured to "ourselves and our posterity," but the Republicans "stand pat," although they indirectly confess that the tariff should be reformed if they could find a time not before but after some Congressional election. When will that time come?

Was the Dingley tariff fixed by and to be perpetuated for the benefit of those who control elections? If so, can not the same parties again control the election? Were the managers of the election the people? Maybe so; it seems not. If the tariff is to be reformed by its friends, surely the Republican party is the friend of the present tariff, but its stand-pat policy demonstrates the Republican party is also the enemy of the people, for they demand tariff reform. The Republicans not only enacted the present tariff, but stand by it to the present moment, and by their acts, if not words, say it shall not be reformed before an election and they neglect to reform it after an election. When, then, can it be reformed? The Speaker says, "Elect a Democratic House."

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make to-day any new suggestions on tariff reform. My object is the very opposite—that is, I propose to uncover some of the old suggestions and thereby remind the Republicans that their stand-pat policy is new and that they are making and not repeating history; to remind them, if you please, that the stand-pat party of to-day is not the Republican party of Lincoln, who in a speech delivered at Pittsburg February 15, 1861, in discussing the tariff in part said:

> Every varying circumstance will require frequent modifications as to the amount (of tariff) needed and the sources of supply. So far there is little difference of opinion among the people. * * * We should do neither more nor less than we gave the people reason to believe we would when they gave us their votes.

Mr. Lincoln was not a stand-patter, as these, his words, indicate, and the many tariff acts he approved, the very titles of which, often literally, stated that they were to be "temporary," while repeatedly Mr. Morrill, who had these bills in charge in the House, stated they were war tariffs, were "temporary," and were levied for revenue purposes to better prosecute our unfortunate civil war.

TARIFF ACTS APPROVED BY LINCOLN.

The tariff act of July 14, 1862, was entitled "An act increasing temporarily the duties on imports, and for other purposes."

The act of April 29, 1864, was entitled "Joint resolution to increase, temporarily, the duties on imports."

The act of June 30, 1864, was entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes." The title to this act, not using the word "temporarily," Mr. Morrill, in urging its passage, felt called on to say:

> This is intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and we must give it our support as such.

The very first tariff act approved by President Lincoln—the law of August 5, 1861—was entitled "An act to provide increased revenues from imports, pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes."

NO "PROTECTION" HERE.

Mr. Blaine says, in his Twenty Years in Congress, that the people had become so satisfied with the happy results of the revenue-tariff policy, inaugurated by the Democrats in 1846, that not one of the three great political parties in the campaign of 1856, in their platforms, even "winked" at the tariff question; and after speaking of the prosperous low-tariff era—from 1846 to 1860, and the first nomination of Mr. Lincoln, in 1860—he alludes thus to the tariff plank framed by that convention:

> The convention therefore avoided the use of the word "protection," and was contented with the moderate declaration that "sound public policy" requires such an adjustment of imports as will encourage the development of the industrial interest of the whole country.

It is then very clear that Mr. Lincoln was not a stand-patter, and that he did not believe in prohibitory tariffs, in time of peace particularly.

I shall make it clear that Mr. Garfield was not a stand-patter. That he was a tariff reformer and urged, with force and effect, a reduction of our war tariffs enacted because of the needs of the civil war. He repeatedly stated, as I shall show, that he believed in a tariff which permitted fair foreign competition to prevent monopoly, and said "I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade."

With as little comment as possible, I shall proceed to show, from Republican authority in the main, that we can not have free trade in this country as long as we levy a tariff to meet the necessary expenses and obligations of the Federal Government. I shall show that the old leaders of the Republican party commended the revenue tariff of 1846, enacted by the Democrats, but that they, yielding to the wishes of the people, and to stop a dangerous amount of revenues from accumulating in the Treasury, voted for the very low tariff of 1857—the lowest since 1812—and that these Republican leaders, with manly frankness, confessed in this House and elsewhere that from 1846 to 1860 there was an era of general prosperity.

I shall further show that Republican leaders, some living to-day, have spoken and voted for laws placing the "monopolized article" on the free list, not only to free the article monopolized but to restore to the oppressed people their right of absolute free trade within and throughout the several States. In recent years the Republicans have defeated all such propositions offered by Democrats.

In 1867 Mr. Sherman, who was often thereafter honored by his party, said:

> It is therefore simply absurd to talk about free trade, and to talk about a protective tariff is unnecessary, because the wit of man could not possibly frame a tariff that would produce $140,000,000 in gold without protecting our domestic industries.

It was about this time that some of the considerate Republicans were trying to reduce our civil war tariffs. In 1867 our customs revenue was $176,417,810, and our total imports were valued at $378,158,683. So Mr. Sherman saw that under these circumstances there was room for tariff reform and still give protection to our domestic industries. The last report of Secretary Shaw states this:

> The revenues of the Government from all sources (by warrant) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905 were:
> From "customs," $261,798,856.91, and our total "receipts" from all sources last year were $697,101,269.95.

So you can see there is room here for tariff reform along the lines suggested by Mr. Sherman.

In 1883 Mr. Samuel J. Randall, a protection Democrat, from Pennsylvania, uttered these words:

> In my judgment the question of free trade will not arise practically in this country during our lives, if ever, so long as we have to raise revenues by duties on imports; and therefore the discussion of that principle is an absolute waste of time. After our public debt is paid in full, our expenditures can hardly be much below $200,000,000, and if this is levied in a businesslike way and in an intelligent manner it will afford adequate protection to our industrial interests in the United States.

Secretary Shaw, in his last report, states that "the outstanding principal of the public debt of the United States, June 30, 1905, was $2,274,615,063.84," and that our total expenditures (not "public debt," mind you, but "expenditures") during the last fiscal year were $720,105,498.55, "showing," says he, "a deficit of $23,204,228.60," under the highest tariff, I may add, we ever had.

Surely at this day and time neither Mr. Sherman nor Mr. Randall would be stand-patters in the face of such burdens as these, and surely there is here shown plenty of room to levy a tariff that would avoid actual free trade, as well as the evils of protection, "the mother of trusts." Surely there is room for tariff reform at the present day along the lines suggested by Mr. Randall or Mr. Sherman.

I now ask the committee to let me read much in little. On March 24, 1870 (Appendix Globe, p. 192), will be found the tariff-reform speech delivered in this House by Mr. ALLISON, now Senator, a leading and much-respected Republican. After stating our obligations to be, "annual interest, $125,000,000; sinking fund required, $25,000,000," Mr. ALLISON said:

So that good faith requires at least $150,000,000 from imports.

Nevertheless, he demanded a reduction of the tariff, and proceeded, and in part argued, as follows:

The practical question is, How shall these duties be proportioned among the various articles imported so as to take out of the pockets of the people the least possible sum over and above the actual amount placed in the Treasury, meanwhile discriminating in favor of articles of necessary consumption, and against articles of voluntary consumption, commonly denominated luxuries?

Impost duties thus levied, with an annual importation of about $450,000,000 in value, will certainly require an average rate of duty sufficient to give our producers of manufactured products greatly the advantage over the manufacturers of similar products in foreign countries.

In brief, Mr. ALLISON, in 1870, argued that to raise from customs $150,000,000 would give our manufacturers "greatly the advantage over" the manufacturers of similar products in foreign countries. Mr. ALLISON continued his great speech in the following language:

It is claimed that the high rates of our present tariff are necessary because the revenue to be obtained therefrom is essential to the Government, and that if we reduce the rates at all the effect will be the depression of all the industrial interests of the country.

The tariff of 1846, although confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect a tariff as any that we have ever had. If any interest was depressed under the tariff of 1846, it was the iron interest.

I do not believe that this interest, as compared with other interests, had sufficient advantage under that tariff; yet when we compare the growth of the country from 1840 to 1850 with the growth of the country from 1850 to 1860, the latter decade being entirely under the tariff of 1846 or the amended and greatly reduced tariff of 1857, we find that the increase in our wealth between 1850 and 1860 was equivalent to 126 per cent, while it was only 64 per cent between 1840 and 1850, four years of which decade were under the tariff of 1842, known as a high protective tariff, but the average rate of which was about 70 per cent below the existing rate, or 27 per cent under the tariff of 1842, as against 44 per cent upon all importations under the present tariff. Our industries were generally prosperous in 1860, with the exception, possibly, of the iron industry.

This was the statement of Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, on this floor during the discussions of the tariff in 1864.

With regard to the condition of the steel industry in 1860, the steel manufacturers in 1866, memorializing Congress for increase of duties on steel, stated that "it was reserved to Pittsburg to bring about the first substantial and enduring success in the year 1860; and, encouraged by our example, numerous establishments have sprung into existence, as already indicated in this paper."

This shows that under the revenue tariff of 1857, which imposed only an ad valorem duty of 12 per cent on steel, a substantial success was achieved in the steel manufacture in 1860. I have read the language of the memorial.

Mr. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, in part thus speaks of the revenue tariff of 1846:

Moreover, the tariff of 1846 was yielding abundant revenue, and the business of the country was in a flourishing condition at the time his administration was organized. Money became very abundant after the year 1849; large enterprises were undertaken, speculation was prevalent, and for a considerable period the prosperity of the country was general and apparently genuine.

As a further evidence that the people were wedded to the principles of a revenue only tariff, even of the lowest of all our "tariffs (act 1857) since 1812," I quote now from Senator Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, afterwards Vice-President, who, in speaking of the act of 1857, in 1861 said:

It is very easy for a gentleman of the Northwest to rise on this floor and talk about protection to Pennsylvania and New England and to say that his people have no protection; but, sir, standing here to-day, I express it as my deliberate judgment that there are not half a dozen States—and I doubt whether there be among them all one—so little interested in changing the tariff as the State of Massachusetts. I say further, as the representative of that State, I know that in voting for this bill I am voting against the wishes of a large portion of the people of my State, who believe the present tariff better for us than your proposed tariff; and I vote, too, against my own deliberate judgment, for I had rather stand on the tariff of 1857 than take this bill.

Several SENATORS. Then, why vote for it?

Mr. WILSON. I vote for it to increase the revenues of the Government. * * * I want no man to vote for this bill in order to protect the interests of Massachusetts; for the tariff of 1857, precisely and exactly as it stands upon your statute books to-day, so far as the productive industry of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is concerned, in all its various departments, amounting to $350,000,000 annually, is the best tariff ever put upon the statute books of this country. That is my judgment; and by passing this bill we shall gain nothing as a State. I shall vote for the bill, but I vote for it to raise revenue; I vote for it as a revenue measure.

It is true that we had a panic in 1857, and the stand-patters insist, therefore, that we should not reduce the tariff at the present day. But I insist that we have had panics also under protective tariffs. Examples—panics of 1873 and 1893.

Representative JOHN J. GARDNER (Republican), in a hearing before the Industrial Commission, 1901, put the usual Republican question to Edward Atkinson, to wit:

Q. You have studied this question in all its lines, and particularly historical. Is it or is it not historically true that ever since we have been maintaining a tariff that when the tariff was highest our manufacturers were most busy and our country most prosperous, and that the periods when our tariffs were lowest marked—by coincidence, if you please—the periods of idleness and depression in this country?

Mr. ATKINSON. My direct experience and personal knowledge begins in 1842 and goes down through the tariff of 1846, which, being a horizontal tariff, putting up the duties on wool while it put down the duties on goods, had a very disastrous effect. It was attributed to free-trade, but it was really due to the advance in duties on wool.

I then come down to the tariff of 1857, the lowest ever known in this country, with the largest free list. The period from 1857 to the beginning of the civil war saw the most steady and constant development of the textile manufacturers of this country that I have ever known. I do not think there has been any such historic coincidence as you suggest.

Q. As a matter of history, was not the year 1857 the year of the great panic, from which we never recovered until the outbreak of the war?

Mr. ATKINSON. It was the year of the great bank panic, in which two of the commission houses to which my goods were consigned suspended payment. That lasted but a few months and was purely a financial panic. It did not interfere with the progress of arts and industries, and in 1858 great prosperity had returned.

We were building the Lewiston mills and the Indian Orchard mills, and I was familiar with the whole business. From that time until the beginning of the war we saw the most steady progressive condition of prosperity in the textile art that I have ever known.

In 1870 Mr. Garfield repeated in this House his utterances on tariff reform made in 1866, in which he said:

I stand now where I have always stood since I have been a Member of this House. I take the liberty of quoting from the Congressional Globe of 1866 the following remarks, which I then made on the subject of the tariff:

"We have seen that one extreme school of economists would place the price of all manufactured articles in the hands of foreign producers by rendering it impossible for our manufacturers to compete with them, while the other extreme school, by making it impossible for the foreigner to sell his competing wares in our markets, would give the people no immediate check upon the prices which our manufacturers might fix for their products.

"I disagree with both these extremes.

"I hold that a properly adjusted competition between home and foreign products is the best gauge by which to regulate the international trade. Duties should be so high that our manufacturers can fairly compete with the foreign products, but not so high as to enable them to drive out the foreign article, enjoy the monopoly of the trade, and regulate the prices as they please. This is my doctrine of protection.

"If Congress pursues this line of policy steadily, we shall, year by year, approach more nearly to the basis of free trade, because we shall be more nearly able to compete with other nations on equal terms.

"I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade.

I repeat that afterwards, in 1880, the Republican party made Mr. Garfield President of the United States. Now, gentlemen, let me go a step further. I will show you in a few words from statements of Mr. Henry O. Havemeyer, president of the sugar trust, to the Industrial Commission, what these high tariffs do. He said:

The mother of all trusts is the customs-tariff bill. The existing bill and the preceding one have been the occasion of the formation of all the large trusts, with very few exceptions, inasmuch as they provide for an inordinate protection to all the interests of the country, sugar refining excepted.

In fact, the tariff bill clutches the people by the throat, and then the governors and the attorney-generals of the several States take action, not against the cause, but against the machinery which the people employ to rifle the public's pockets.

In support of this statement I again remind you that under the revenue-only tariff of 1846 we had no trusts and no multimillionaires, but had an overflowing Treasury and general prosperity for our forefathers and their posterity.

Mr. Garfield (June 14, 1878, Forty-fifth Congress, Appendix, p. 293) demanded tariff reform, and evidently feared the uprising of these "captains of industry" to oppress the people. He said:

What is that point of equilibrium? In my judgment it is this: A rate so high that foreign producers can not flood our markets and break down our home manufacturers, but not so high as to keep them altogether out. Enabling our manufacturers to combine and raise the prices not so high as to stimulate an unnatural and unhealthy growth of manufacturers.

In other words, I would have the duty so adjusted that every great American industry can fairly live and make fair profits; and yet so low that if our manufacturers attempted to put up prices unreasonably the competition from abroad would come in and bring down prices to a fair rate.

Such a tariff, I believe, will be supported by the majority of the Americans. We are not barred from having such a tariff in our present law. In some respects we have departed from that standard. Wherever it does, we should amend it, and by so doing we shall secure stability and prosperity.

FREE LISTING THE MONOPOLIZED ARTICLE.

I now take a step further and will show that great Republican leaders have insisted on placing the monopolized article on the free list to free the article and give the tariff-taxed people an open chance to procure substance to maintain their homes and families and at prices as reasonable, as low as they should be, under the circumstances.

October 15, 1899, Mr. Sherman said:

The primary object of a protective tariff is to invite the fullest competition of individuals and corporations in domestic production. If the individuals or corporations combine to advance the price of a domestic product to prevent free result of open and fair competition, I would without a moment's hesitation—

Mark that, gentlemen—

I would without a moment's hesitation reduce the duties on foreign goods competing with them, in order to break down the combination. Whenever this competition is evaded or avoided by combination of individuals or manufacturers, the duty should be reduced and foreign competition promptly invited.

And on March 21, 1890, Mr. Sherman said:

If the combination is aided by our tariff laws they should be promptly changed, and if necessary equal competition with all the world should be invited in the monopolized article.

Thus spoke the late Governor Mount (Republican), of Indiana, in 1899:

I am against trusts. Remove the protection from the article controlled by trusts, thereby permitting open competition, and see how quickly these trusts will come to their senses.

Again, Senator Washburn (Republican), of Minnesota, in 1899, said:

The Republican party has got to disconnect itself from trusts, and wherever they find the trust is depending for its exorbitant profits largely on protective duties it will be the duty of Republican Congressmen and Senators to remove the duties at once. This should be done with the duty on steel rails and tin plate.

Repeatedly have the Republicans in these latter years defeated Democratic propositions in this House to free list the monopolized article. You will not dispute that.

On June 6, 1870, by vote—ayes 112, noes 78, not voting 40 (Globe, vol. 43, p. 4101)—the House passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is hereby instructed, at the earliest moment practicable, to report a bill to this House to abolish the tariff on coal, so as to secure that important article of fuel to the people free from all taxes.

Among those voting "aye" were Messrs. ALLISON and CULLOM, now Senators; the late Senator Hawley; John A. Logan, afterwards Senator and the nominee of his party for Vice-President; B. F. Butler, afterwards governor of Massachusetts; Mr. Dawes, and others—all Republicans.

But this is not all of the record of the Republican party before it wandered away from the path of political rectitude, I may charitably say. I go a step further.

Mr. HALE, now Senator, while a Member of this House, in 1871, denounced the salt monopoly, protected by our tariff, as he said, by 18 cents a hundred pounds and 24 cents in sacks, and then said:

The best Turks Island salt can be purchased at the place produced at 9 and 10 cents per bushel. I believe there is no one question about which the reflection of millions of people day by day is so decided as it is in declaring that there should be no tax upon this article of salt. I have been asked to amend the bill introduced by me, so as to cut down the duty 50 per cent. I do not consent to that. I believe this article should be put upon the free list; that the monopoly which has obtained heretofore for the Onondaga Salt Works—as great and complete as any monopoly ever planted by the Tudors in England's most despotic times—ought to cease.

He said, to break down this monopoly, salt ought to be placed upon the "free list."

Again, a little later, May 18, 1872, Mr. Garfield took the same position. He said:

American salt for two years past has been sold in Toronto, Canada, at a dollar less per barrel than on the New York side of the lake. That is—

He said—

we produced it, shipped it across, paying whatever portage, freights, and transportation were required, and then sold to our Canadian neighbors at a dollar per barrel less than it was sold to people on our shores. Certainly gentlemen will not want a duty continued that enables that thing to be done.

Again, gentlemen, Senator ALLISON, on March 25——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman pardon me for a minute?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I was out in Michigan a few years, a good many years after the date of the statements read by the gentleman, and I found salt selling there at 75 cents a barrel, and the barrel costing 25 cents. What was the occasion of that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If you will turn back, my dear and distinguished friend, you will find that in the State of New York in 1855 the railroads of that State charged $1.95 per mile per passenger, and now the rate all over the country is down to about 2 cents per mile, and you have voted in this Congress to regulate railroads in order to make the charge even less than that when, under the circumstances, that rate of 2 cents a mile is shown in a suit to be unreasonable. The average freight rate in New York in 1855 per mile was $2.02. It is now less in the country at large than 8 cents.

The gentleman knows the cause of low rates and prices is improved machinery, improved artisans, better educated labor. In the main, these things combined have wrought this change. It is not a question of whether or not a thing is cheaper now than it was when you were a boy or a soldier. That is not the question. The crucial question is: Is the product or toll as cheap under the circumstances as it should be? And I say that when our manufacturers sell products to foreigners cheaper than they do to your home folks, which they boldly admit, they are doing for our people at home a great injustice. I want to say to my distinguished friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that if he will read the speeches of Henry Clay, as I dare say he has—for I have never heard anything good that he has not read—or if he will read some of the leading speeches of some of the great founders of his party, he will find there an expressed or implied promise made to the American people that, "If you will bear this protective tariff tax for a while, we, your manufacturers, will make and sell you the cheapest and best products in the world." But the manufacturers have not kept their promise. They have not kept the faith. They sell, and admit they do, the foreigner cheaper than they sell the same article to our own people.

In speaking about salt, Mr. Allison, March 25, 1870, said:

I only wish to add that I believe the duty upon that article is unnecessarily burdensome to the consumer and ought not to remain, even upon the theory of the protectionists themselves. A duty of 18 to 24 cents per hundred pounds is imposed on salt. This heavy duty was imposed to compensate for the internal tax of 6 cents per 100 pounds. This internal tax was one of the first repealed, and yet this heavy duty remains. In the name of protection we are told that if a reduction is made the effect will be to destroy the industry of the salt manufacturer.

Mr. Allison then showed that the salt industry had prospered in 1858 under a low tariff and made a favorable comparison of the salt business of that year with the same business in 1868 and 1869, and then said:

It is an indisputable fact that in most instances the price is enhanced to the full extent of the duty. The duty in 1869 was from 18 to 24 cents. In 1858 it was 15 per cent.

Mr. MAHON. In the Fifty-third Congress the Democrats passed the Wilson bill. How did you get along?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MAHON. I say that you followed Garfield and Sherman, and all these people, in the Fifty-third Congress, and passed the Wilson bill. How did you get along?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell you. If the Republicans had not enacted the McKinley tariff bill, which produced a deficit in the Treasury and broke down the credit of the Government and compelled President Cleveland to issue bonds, and a Pennsylvania judge had not outraged his high office and destroyed the income tax, included in the Wilson Act, that law would have gotten along all right.

Mr. MAHON. I wanted to know what did it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is certainly my judgment; that is the way I think about it. And I want to say about the Wilson Act that was not a purely revenue act; it was a step in the right direction. It was a Democratic act that I did not in all its parts indorse, but I did indorse the income-tax proposition, and I hope the President will get the members of his party to be as good Democrats as he has proven of late to be about a great many matters, and we will have before long some kind of a justifiable tax on incomes and inherited property.

Mr. MAHON. If we put the Democrats in power for four years there will be no income.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am satisfied that if there occurs any "income" anywhere at any time, the Republicans will be sure to claim it. [Laughter.]

In 1880, Mr. Gear, late Senator from Iowa, demanded that the tariff be reduced to destroy the monopoly in Bessemer steel rails, saying that a proper reduction would remove the monopoly. He said:

The manufacturers of this class of rails in the United States are controlled by a combination of not exceeding, I think, ten firms. This combination is protected by high and specific tariff, which prevents the importation of foreign rails to any extent, thereby increasing the cost of the rails to the country.

He further said that the existing tariff put immense profits into the pockets of the monopoly, composed of but few persons, at the expense indirectly not only of the farmers of Iowa, but the whole West.

Mr. Chairman, in 1880 the tariff, ad valorem, on steel rails was $28 per ton. The home price of rails was $67.50, foreign price $23.12; difference, $32.22. (Industrial Com. Rept., Vol. XIII, p. 625.)

Let me recur for a moment or two to what Seantor Gear said in 1880. He said steel rails were in the hands of a few manufacturers, and wanted the tariff reduced, that railroads in the West might purchase and build railroads cheaper, for the betterment of the farmer.

On May 11, 1901, Mr. Schwab, of the Carnegie steel concern, before the Industrial Commission, said this:

Q. Is it a fact generally proved of all exporters in this country that they do sell at lower prices in foreign markets than they do in the home markets?—A. That is true, perfectly true.

Q. Would you say that when business is in a normal condition the export prices are regularly somewhat lower than home prices?—A. Oh, yes; always.

Q. Suppose you take the case of steel rails. Could you give about the difference between the export and domestic price?—A. I would have to make a guess; I do not know exactly. The export price is about $23 a ton.

Q. And the price here?—A. Was $26 and $28.

Q. At the same time?—A. At the same time.

The Republicans and the manufacturers may think that it is right, a proper "trick" in trade, to oppress our people, who have been tariff taxed for a half century to build up manufactories under the promise that the tariff would be temporary and that soon they would sell to our people the cheapest and best goods in the world, and yet to-day they sell the cheapest and best goods in the world to only foreign markets; but I think it is an outrage and an abuse that the American people should not stand, and I do not believe they will, when they are advised of these facts.

Mr. Havemeyer, before the Industrial Commission, said this:

Without the tariff I doubt if we should have dared to take the risk of forming the trust. It could have been done; but I certainly should not have risked all I had, which was then embarked in the sugar business, in a trust unless the business had been protected as it was by the tariff.

* * * * * * *

Steel rails were exported at the time the steel schedule was under discussion. They were being sent to England and Scotland. They can be produced for $15 a ton; they are worth $24 a ton. Now, the reason they are worth $24 a ton is because the people, under the tariff, are mulcted for the difference. I am not talking about things that are ancient history; I am talking about things that exist. I am not talking as to whether 100 per cent was necessary or not. I am talking about the effect of the tariff to-day, which is the mother of these trusts which are mulcting the people, and there is not a line of it free from this abuse to-day.

But, gentlemen, Mr. Schwab in his testimony made a statement that I bring home to you to-day, seriously as I can, as honestly as I know how, and I ask you to give particular attention to his words:

Q. Do you think that men of limited capital can start in business and become large owners as readily now, under this system, as they did formerly?

Mr. SCHWAB. I do not quite understand that.

Q. Has a person or a company with limited capital the same opportunity to start in business and become large proprietors or owners under the consolidated system as there was formerly?

Mr. SCHWAB. Well, if you put the question that way, I think the man with exceptional ability to-day has a better opportunity of becoming a large owner or a large director in one of these great companies than ever before. If you say the man with capital at the start—small capital at the start—I doubt it. (Vol. 13, Rep. Ind. Com., p. 459.)

What natural chance, if you please, has the poor boy, honest, industrious, and intelligent, to make a "start in the world," under these circumstances, and maintain his self-respect and independence? What chance has he to start at the ground and remain a free man, with these immense corporations and dangerous fortunes to crush him out, or prevent him from even starting in in the race of life? This is a serious question, I submit in all candor, and is a condition which is undermining the manhood of our citizens and is not slowly attacking the very corner stone of our Republic. Here is a condition that we should not permit to exist under any law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Texas yield me a little more time?

Mr. BURLESON. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WEISSE], who wishes to speak to-night.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say I could have a little more time.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WEISSE].

Mr. WEISSE. Mr. Chairman, while it has been the policy of the Government from the first to protect leather and its manufactures by a tariff, hides have been admitted free the greater part of the time. The first tariff on hides, which also included skins, was enacted in 1842, when a duty of 5 per cent was placed on them. This was reduced to 4 per cent in 1857 and raised again in March, 1861. In December, 1861, it was made 10 per cent at which figure it remained until 1873. In the tariff bill enacted that year hides and skins were placed upon the free list, remaining so until the enactment of the Dingley tariff bill in 1897, which puts a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on hides. It is claimed that the western Senators, believing that this duty would be for the protection and benefit of the cattle raisers in their sections, favored and supported the law. No doubt they did, but in doing so they probably expected that there would be a duty of 15 per cent on all hides, as the bill provided. But this clause was inserted in a shrewd and cunning way, engineered undoubtedly by the packers, who knew full well that hides are classified by the trade as follows: Small, unborn calfskins, called "slunks;" those weighing from 2 to 7 pounds, "deacons;" those weighing from 7 to 15 pounds, "calf," and those from 15 to 25 pounds, "kips." After the bill had become a law, the custom-house appraisers passed upon this classification and ruled that all skins under 25 pounds were not hides, within the meaning of the act, including calf, goat, horse, and hog skins, and all other skins used for tanning purposes, and should be admitted free of duty, and that only hides weighing 25 pounds and upward were dutiable. I will read you the ruling of the Board of Appraisers:

[Circular No. 173.]

CLASSIFICATION OF CALFSKINS AND HIDES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 23, 1898.

To collectors and other officers of the customs:

In G. A. 4052 the Board of General Appraisers held that raw calfskins are not dutiable as "hides of cattle" under paragraph 437 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, but are free of duty under the provisions in paragraph 664 for "skins of all kinds, raw (except sheepskins with the wool on)." They found as a fact that "the term 'hides' in trade covers skins of the larger animals weighing 25 pounds and over, while the term used in trade to describe the skin of a calf is 'a calfskin' weighing 25 pounds or under, and that the dividing line between dried skins and dried hides is 12 pounds—that is to say, dried hides weigh 12 pounds and over, while dried calfskins weigh 12 pounds and under."

While the Department concurred in the decision that calfskins were not dutiable as cattle hides, it desired to have the question of the line of demarcation as to weights between skins and hides further considered, and therefore instructed custom officers to make up another case to submit to the Board of General Appraisers for their determination, with a view of having the matter reviewed by the courts if deemed advisable. After a further hearing the Board found as a fact, in G. A. 4215, "that commercially the dividing line between raw cowhides and calfskins in weight is 25 pounds, the term 'calfskins' including all so-called 'hides' or 'skins' which weigh less than 25 pounds. When dry the dividing line is 12 pounds, and all weighing 12 pounds being commercially known as 'skins' and all weighing 12 pounds or over as 'hides.'"

In order that this question might be further reviewed, the Department directed an appeal from this decision to the circuit court, and on the recommendation of the conference of local appraisers recently held in New York adopted a table of weights, which are promulgated in circular 165, of August 27, 1898, to be followed by customs officers in classifying skins and hides.

At the request of tanners and shoe manufacturers the Department has further considered the subject and carefully reviewed the testimony taken by the Board of General Appraisers, which was substantially unanimous in fixing 25 pounds as the dividing line between hides and skins in a green, or wet, condition and 12 pounds when dry. The counsel for the Treasury Department in cases before the Board of General Appraisers reports that he thinks no trade testimony can be obtained to controvert the dividing line as decided by the Board.

The Department concludes, therefore, to accept 25 pounds in weight as the dividing line between calfskins and hides when green salted and 12 pounds as the dividing line between dry hides and skins. You will be governed accordingly, and hereafter assess duty as hides on such skins weighing 25 pounds or over and 12 pounds or over, respectively.

Circular No. 165 is hereby revoked.

W. B. HOWELL, Assistant Secretary.

After this ruling it was reported to me by a Chicago hide dealer that calfskins did not decline in our home market, but did advance in foreign markets, showing that the duty of 15 per cent only compelled the foreigner to sell his calfskins 15 per cent cheaper than ours and did not raise the value of the American product. Hides sold in 1892 as low as $0.04½, in 1905 as high as $0.13¾, down to $0.12 in January, and are to-day selling at $0.13. Calfskins that come in free of duty sold as low as $0.06¼ in 1892 and as high as $0.16¾ in 1905, and to-day are selling at $0.15. Why did the calfskins, which are on the free list, advance? Was it the Dingley tariff?

Then, for the first time, did the western Senators who had supported this duty discover that they had been handed a gold brick, as under this ruling 80 to 90 per cent of the hides sold by the farmers are imported free of duty, and, notwithstanding the continued claims and contentions of the leaders and spellbinders of the opposition that that party stands for and advocates the protection of the infant industries of the country, it is a plain and uncontrovertible fact that the duty on hides provided for in the Dingley bill affords no advantage or protection to the infant industry of the hide and leather producer, as this industry in the hands of the farmers and cattle raisers may properly be called. On the other hand, the only protection or advantage acquired through the 15 per cent duty is enjoyed fully and only by the packers, the kings and dictators of the hide business, to the detriment of the farmers, cattle raisers, and also to the tanners and exporters of manufactured leather goods and to the laborers and all users of leather, including every industry in the United States.

According to the census reports of 1900, there were taken off by the packers 6,281,952 hides, at a value of $33,925,911, and we imported $19,408,217 worth on which duty was paid, and the tanners used about $77,000,000 worth. We also probably used of the 10 to 12 pound dry hides, called "skins," which come in free of duty, several million dollars' worth. The farmer take-off was from two million to two and a half million hides, at an average price of about $4 apiece, or 8 cents per pound, according to the tables herein annexed.

Our friends say that the duty adds to the price of beef on the hoof, which I am willing to admit to a certain extent. It may add a little. I find that we exported in 1904, according to the official figures I now have before me, 593,409 head of cattle, at a total value of $42,256,291, which was at an average of about $72 per head, and on account of the 15 per cent duty on hides we certainly must have sold these cattle for less money than we would have received had the hides been admitted free of duty, in order to make up for the increased cost in bringing the hides back to this country. The hides of these cattle were worth no less than $6,000,000 in Chicago, as the price averaged during the year about 12 to 16½ cents per pound, and would have meant a loss to the shippers of at least from $900,000 to $1,000,000, on account of the 15 per cent duty to import these hides, less the difference in freight rates against the farmer. This more than equals the profit that the farmer would make, if he got it all, on the hides marketed direct by him in this country.

I will insert a table showing our exports and imports of hides for a term of years, which will be interesting in considering this matter.

In 1904 there was imported $52,000,000 worth of hides. On $10,000,000 worth, or about one-fifth of which, duty was paid. This would give the Government a revenue of about $1,500,000.

In 1905 we imported $64,763,146 worth of hides, and exported hides valued at $3,246,887 in 1904. Of the amount imported, duty was collected on $14,949,518 worth. But by exporting an amount of leather claimed to have been made from imported hides equal to the amount of hides upon which duty was paid to the Government a rebate of 99 per cent of the 15 per cent can, under this provision of the bill, be recovered. At the end of the year we may be in debt to the United States Leather Company. In fact, according to the last statement of the company, a copy of which I herewith insert, they report $590,000 received as cash rebates or drawbacks. The duty on imported hides which they are compelled to pay will be returned to them in the shape of rebates upon exported leather claimed to have been made from imported hides. And the Government derives no revenue whatever from this protection or graft of the large packers.

In 1895 we exported 45,364,349 pounds of sole leather, valued at $6,919,272, against 36,830,717 pounds in 1904, valued at $6,978,497, which plainly shows that there was a decrease of 20 per cent in the amount of sole leather made from South American imported hides. This means a loss to the American laborer and tanner, as these hides, on account of the difference of the 15 per cent duty, went to foreign countries to be tanned. It takes about a year to tan this class of stock, and on account of the additional investment, including interest and insurance, amounts to more than the profit made out of the leather. Whereas all leather made out of free hides has increased over 50 per cent, as there was exported in 1895 $6,435,590, and there was exported in 1904 $16,189,996, which plainly shows that if we had free hides the heavy leather industry, as stated before, would increase in the same proportion, as we have better advantages here, with our forests of bark, than they have in any foreign country, and it is only to the detriment of the tanners and laborers. The Government derives no revenue, as we exported more heavy leather than we imported heavy hides.

The Dingley tariff can not benefit the farmer to any great extent, because the prices of his crops depend upon export demand and price. For instance, the duty of 25 cents a bushel on potatoes does not make the price, as last year, in my State, in Waushara County, potatoes sold for 6 cents a bushel to a starch factory, there being no shipping market. After hauling them 10 to 15 miles, a great many of them were thrown on the land to rot, after being carried all winter, and dug and hauled into the cellars at a cost probably of no less than 10 cents a bushel.

In 1900, according to the Census Reports, the total value of all farm products, including forest products, amounted to $4,717,069,973, and the total valuation of all farm property, including buildings, was $20,439,901,164. The average rate of interest was 7.07 per cent. Figuring this on his investment, which he is entitled to, as it is only an average rate of interest, would give him a net income, after deducting the interest, of $3,286,276,891. I find, according to the reports also, that there were engaged in agricultural pursuits 10,381,765 workers. This would give them an average annual earning of $316 each, and after paying taxes, repairs, and other incidental charges, which I would estimate, for the sake of argument, at from $10 to $100 per year, it would give them an average income far less than the manufacturing laborers receive. It is estimated that there are 28,500,000 people on farms, and this would give a net income of from $80 to $115 to each person on the farm—an amount below the cost of feeding the soldiers in the United States Army, to say nothing about buying their clothes and the other products of labor needed by them. All this in such a prosperous country as ours, where about 35 per cent of the people are on farms; where the railroad, interest charges, and taxes exceed the value of the products of the farm. How much do they consume of the products?

The expenditures of the National Government, less pensions, were, in 1882, $111,292,693; in 1890, $136,356,739.80; in 1900, $448,850,287; in 1904, $583,425,680. The estimate for 1906 is about $740,000,000. This no doubt causes prosperity for those connected with the system. I bring these facts out to show the dissatisfaction of the people with the conditions existing under the distribution of the products of the farm and labor.

If the Dingley tariff is so great a benefit, and causes prosperity, why did the farms in New York State decline about 12 per cent from 1880, and lands in Ohio from 1880 to 1900 decline 8 per cent, where the large increase in manufacturing in these States should add to the value of the farms? There were about the same number of acres in farms in Ohio, but 29,500 more farms in 1900 than in 1880, and in New York about 14,000 less farms, with about 1,000,000 less in acreage. If the decline under this system in these States is not due to the Republican policies, but to natural conditions, then why should you claim the increase in the farms of Nebraska, Kansas, and Wisconsin? If this system of graft, and protection, and tariff robbery is good for the farmer, it must include the farmer in New York as well as the farmer in Kansas and Nebraska. You have been preaching that they have all been prosperous during the last years under the Dingley bill, but you can not produce the figures to show it.

The gentleman from Minnesota has stated on the floor that the reason our forefathers landed in New England was because they got seasick and couldn't go any further. But they landed, and they are now making us in the West certainly sick by continually asking us to contribute to the tariff, railroad, Wall street graft, under this system, and to the prosperity of the increased officeholders who sit in chairs and do nothing, and for the maintenance of which we pay the taxes. Is it constitutional?

I endeavored to obtain from the Treasury Department the net revenue received by the Government from this duty on hides, but was informed by the Secretary that it would not be furnished, as no account of it was kept.

Whatever benefits the farmer derives from the 15 per cent duty on hides he more than loses on the cattle he exports and the leather he uses. The price probably would be as high if hides were on the free list, as supply and demand the world over regulates the price, the same as it does in calfskins, and would put the American tanner in competition with the world to obtain his raw material as cheap as his foreign competitor. There is also a difference to him, and to his disadvantage, in the leather goods he uses, such as heavy shoes, in which the leather, at the least calculation, according to the statement hereto appended, costs about $1, and there is a difference on these, as they are almost all coarse leather, of at least 10 to 12 cents per pair, notwithstanding the statement that on the average of shoes it is from 2 to 6 cents, heavy plow boots, in which the leather that pays duty costs about $1.50, making a difference of about 20 cents on a pair of boots. In every set of harness that the farmer buys it makes a difference to him of at least $1.50 to $2.50. On every set of horse collars that he buys it makes a difference of from 40 cents to $1. It also makes a large difference on his buggy tops, buggy cushions, the belting he uses on his farm machinery, his furniture, his grip and traveling suit case, of which very few are used, however, by the farmer; on all of these articles, and in addition numerous others he uses, are made from hides upon which is levied the 15 per cent duty, and which he pays as a bounty direct to the packers. On the other hand, you will find that he uses the leather from hides, or, as classified by the customs appraisers, "skins," etc., which come in free, on his hatband, razor strop, maybe his suspenders, on his pocketbook, and the tops of his Sunday shoes, as well as the kid gloves he may wear, as the heavy gloves that he uses every day while at work in the field are made from hides that pay a duty; and he may use hides for his preserves, as most of the preserves are made out of gelatine, which is made out of hide scrap trimmings, on which there is no duty. Therefore he pays directly a bounty to the packer on about four times as much leather as he produces hides. He pays this, not to the Government as a revenue, but as a bounty to the packers.

This duty on hides gives the foreign leather manufacturer an opportunity to come over to this country and buy leather at 10 to 12 per cent less than our manufacturers, as the law provides, as stated before, that where leather made from imported hides is exported 99 per cent of the 15 per cent duty collected upon the hides when they come in should be paid back to the tanner who exports the leather, and therefore, of course, all exported heavy leather is claimed, for the purpose of collecting the drawbacks, to be made out of imported hides, and the Government derives no revenue from this tariff on hides. The foreign manufacturer buys at from 10 to 12 per cent less than our home manufacturer of leather goods, and can sell his product in foreign markets so much lower in competition with our manufacturer, and we, in this case, actually pay a bounty to the foreign buyer of leather, who manufactures the same over there into boots, shoes, harnesses, and belts. Under these circumstances the foreign farmer and manufacturer are given an opportunity to buy their shoes, harnesses, and belts for less than our farmer and manufacturer, and this discrimination against the farmer and manufacturer of the United States is made possible and paid for directly by the United States Government. The United States shoe manufacturer can not avail himself of the rebate, because his shoes are made from so many different small pieces of leather that it is impossible for him to go to the custom-house and state exactly in an affidivit, under oath, just what parts are made from imported hides and what parts from domestic hides. The foreign manufacturer, therefore, has an advantage of about 12 per cent on the manufactured goods over the American manufacturer. Even though the American manufacturer could prove to the satisfaction of the custom officials that certain parts of his shoes were made from imported hides, and thereby be entitled to the rebate, there would be no money in the Treasury to pay these rebates, because it would be exhausted by the exportation of heavy leather. The existing law, however, provides that under the circumstances mentioned he could collect the rebate if there was any money left.

Finally, and I think the facts above cited prove it, this 15 per cent duty goes entirely into the hands of the packers, to the detriment of the shoe manufacturers and tanners, as well as to the detriment of all manufacturing establishments that have to pay this additional price for their leather goods, and it gives the foreigner a chance to buy his material, as stated before, at much less than our own people. According to the census of 1900, it makes a difference in the sales of hides by the farmer. But one out of every ten sells one hide during the year that pays a duty. If he gets 60 cents more for the hide he sells, he is able to get 15 per cent more than the foreigners are getting for their hides, and the only advantage for the farmer would be, if he did this, to get a small additional price for his cattle. My men at home recently sorted several carloads of hides that came from the South, picked up in original lots, and less than 10 per cent of the total lot of dry hides contained hides that would have been subject to the duty, and these were all taken off by the farmer.

How does this duty help the laboring people who constitute the bone and sinew of the Republic? There is no argument in the contention that they are protected, as the following facts will show: The laborers working in the packing houses in 1890, according to the census reports, averaged $550 in wages per year. In 1900, under this great prosperity cry of a subsidized press, they are only getting $500, or a cut of 10 per cent. It certainly costs them more to live at the present time than it did then. Besides the reduction in wages, the cost of living and taxes have increased, and the laboring men now receive still less of that which they produce than they did in 1890 or 1893.

Neither do the laborers in tanneries receive any benefit from this duty on hides, nor can you call it a protection to the laborers, as I find that in 1890 there were employed in that industry 42,392 laborers, earning on an average $501 per year, and in 1900 there were 52,109 laborers at an average annual wage of about $433. Wisconsin produces about one-tenth of the leather produced in the country, and employs 5,262 laborers at an average of about $432. The decline was caused no doubt by this general prosperity and advance in wages that they tell about in the newspapers and on the floor at different times. This could no doubt be analyzed and explained from a lawyer standpoint, and I understand there are 249 lawyers in this House; but it would be pretty hard for a business man to get up and say they are better off now, when they were getting on an average $70 less than they were in 1890. It would also be hard for anyone to get up here and state that they are able to consume as much of the farmer's products, which have increased in value, according to reliable reports, from 1 per cent to 300 per cent since 1890.

In 1890 there were employed in the shoe manufactories of the United States 133,690 people, at an average annual wage of $464, and in 1900, that great and prosperous year, there were employed 142,922, and received an annual wage of $414, or $50 per year less than in 1890, or about 9 per cent less. With the cost of living increasing, as it did, through the tariff and the trusts, the wages of laborers in shoe manufactories were reduced so that the shoe manufacturers could compete with foreign manufacturers who buy their leather 10 to 12 per cent cheaper in the American market than do our home manufacturers.

In the coal mines of Pennsylvania the miners receive, according to the report of the Coal Strike Commission, 1902, and the Pennsylvania Coal Company, on an average of $307 per year for mining coal, mostly all of them being men. This means that after paying a rent of $85 to $120, and fuel bill, they have less than $200 to support a family of five, clothe and feed them, or an average of 55 cents a day for the five, or 11 cents a day for each person, which is 3⅔ cents per meal, not enough to buy milk for the infant. If it were all used for food, which is impossible, as shoes and clothing must be bought, how much of the farm products or the products of their fellow-laborers can they buy? Are they prosperous? This was in 1902. You say they were; they voted that way. How can you represent these people if this is prosperity?

Take the earnings of the average tannery laborer, which were $433 per year, according to the reports of the last census. The census shows that there are only a few, if any, boys and girls, and about all able-bodied men in the tanneries. No doubt 80 per cent of them are married men, living in large cities, where they are unable to rent a house for less than $120 per year, where their fuel and lights cost them not less than $40 per year, and the chances are they live a distance from the manufacturing plant, and are compelled to use the street cars, which will cost them $30 annually. These are fixed charges that are absolutely necessary, and may be varied in one way or another a little, but not a great deal for the sake of argument, leaving him $263 with which to buy clothing and food and the products of the soil that are not completely controlled by the corporations, and also pay the protective tariff. Where the average family consists of five persons, at a low estimate, and I know a great many have ten, it would give them about 70 cents per day, for every day in the year to live on, which would mean 13 cents apiece, figuring on five persons in the family, for every day. If they are to buy eatables for the table, it would bring them down to 4½ cents per meal, and this does not include clothing.

I find, according to the reports of the Army, that they allow 23 cents a day for the commissary department; in other words, they allow 23 cents a day, or about 8 cents per meal, to a man for his eatables, which are all bought in large quantities at the very lowest price.

In my home county, where we have an asylum for the incurable insane, and have several hundred acres of land connected with it, the average cost of maintenance is $2.31 per week, or about 33 cents per day per person, which is two and one-half times as much as the average laborer has to support his children, and the same holds true of the men fed in the United States Army. Now, this cost of $2.31 per week, or 34 cents per day, of maintenance of each individual in said asylum does not allow anything for rent and other incidental charges, and also gives them the free use of 200 acres of land on which they are able to raise, without any outside help, a great deal of the produce they consume. This goes to show that the average laborer is unable to earn, under this system, by working ten hours per day, enough to supply him with the necessities of life, to say nothing of the luxuries, through this unequal distribution of what he produces, whereby some of the highly protected tariff trusts and other combinations are able to rob him of his products.

As stated before, the shoe manufacturing laborers receive no benefit by reason of this duty, as they are hardly living at the wages they are now receiving; and, in this connection, I wish to refer at this time to a statement appearing on page 1312 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, inserted by the great and noble general from Ohio, no doubt for the purpose of stopping revision talk by the western Congressmen, which shows the wages paid in certain shoe manufactories and certain leather manufactories, and which statement, in part, is as follows:

Milwaukee—A prosperous year—Increases recorded in every line—Manufacturers and wholesalers jubilant.

Well, there is jubilance. "Number of business houses, 33." Nothing about the laborers being jubilant. Well, let us see. According to the table they may be the other way. It then goes on with these words: "Leather establishments, 13; employment, 3,800 people; wages, $926,780; product, $20,000,000. Boots and shoes, 20 establishments; employment of labor, 5,000; wages, $1,489,643; product, $9,876,489."

Now, this statement shows that the 3,800 leather workers average in wages $244 per year. This is no doubt Ohio stand-pat Republican prosperity for the laboring man. What does it mean? I know that if a person wants any kind of board at all in Milwaukee it will cost $3.50 per week, and the washing of his clothes will cost 50 cents per week. Board and washing of their clothes are, as we all know, absolute necessities of existence. Neither the boarding-house keeper nor the wash woman would be able to make more than a living at these rates, which amount to $4 per week, or $208 per year to the average laborer. Now, according to this table, the laborer earns $244 per year. He would, therefore, have left $36 at the end of the year to pay for his clothing, boots and shoes, tobacco, and what else he may consume. Now, in case he should live a mile or two from the factory, which is entirely possible, and has to take the street car every morning to his work, and return at night, working on an average three hundred days a year, it would cost him 8 cents a day, or $24 per year. He would then have $12 left to pay for his boots, shoes, and clothing, and other articles he may consume during the year. This may be Republican prosperity, but it is doubtful if this laborer would be able to buy more than one pair of the shoes that he produces during the year, and the table shows that he would be able to produce from seven to eight hundred pair. How many men would it take to produce the total output of shoes of this country; and, under these conditions, how much of the farm products, in the line of clothing and the necessities of life other than the food, could they consume? If this laborer was a married man, with one or two babes in his family, what means would he have to resort to in order to keep them alive and prevent death by privation or starvation? It is such conditions as these that breed anarchy and lawlessness in the land, where about 80 per cent of the laboring people die in debt and less than one-tenth own their homes. How can you represent these people when you will not admit their condition?

If this table is true, could the conditions be any worse than in the Philippines, where we hear about the people working for 8 and 10 cents a day, and where they can live for 2 and 3 cents a day, and die free of debt? According to this statement, they are actually better off than the people living in this country. There is no doubt that the American laborer, according to tables furnished time and time again, receives less for the amount he produces than any other laborer in the world, and by taking the statement referred to and following it out in detail we have a fair sample of what his condition is in this land of plenty. I doubt the truth of this statement, but it certainly must have been made by some one connected with the manufacturing establishments, for the purpose of showing to the shoe and leather manufactory wage-earners in the East that they are far better off than in the West, and to keep them from coming out into our country, where they can live for much less than they can in the East; where they can enjoy the free and fresh air and water in a climate where the death rate for children under 5 years of age is only 168 per 1,000, as compared with that of the high-protected corporation cities of the East, where it runs up, as at Fall River, Mass., to 403 in 1,000—cities which have upon them the curse of tariff graft and railroad graft, creating conditions which compel children from 5 to 16 years of age to go to work in order to exist.

In 1900, in the city of Fall River, Mass., there were employed in the factories 32,780 people, at an average wage of $358 per year, where the leading industry is the manufacturing of cotton goods, on which the tariff collected amounts to more than the cost of the goods bought in foreign markets. Who does this duty protect? The people who use this class of goods to wear, no doubt, from buying them in larger quantities, as it certainly can not protect the laborer.

You will find that wages are generally lower in high protected industries than in unprotected ones, as in the building trades.

In the manufacture of woolen goods the average wage in 1890 was $350, as well as $350 in 1900 where the tariff has been increased.

There were employed 5,314,439 wage-earners in the manufacturing establishments, according to the census of 1900. They received $2,327,295,545 in wages, or an average of about $440 per laborer, or about $5 per year less than they did in 1890, which shows that the Dingley bill did not raise laboring wages. Also, living has increased, according to the statement of Carroll D. Wright and others, from 25 to 45 per cent, and wages, on the whole, according to these figures, have decreased. Dividends on railroad stocks have increased from 80 to 120 per cent, and no doubt they are in favor of the system.

We employed in the leather trade, according to the last census, 233,496 hands, and paid them in wages $107,978,195, or less than it cost to maintain the United States Army, to say nothing about the Navy, and they produced $529,311,269 worth of goods. The cost of labor in the tannery, on sole leather, is from 5 per cent to 7 per cent of the total cost of production, and the cost of labor in the production of other leathers in the tannery will run from 9 per cent to 15 per cent, showing that a duty of from 20 to 45 per cent on these different goods is not necessary to protect the American laborer or manufacturer, provided you give him free raw material, low taxation, and reasonable railroad rates.

The duty is of no benefit to the tanning industry, as it has been on the decline. I find, according to the last census reports, that in 1880 there were 5,628 tanneries; in 1890, 1,787, and in 1900 1,306, or a decrease of 30 per cent in the last ten years, and less than one-fourth of what there were in 1880. This is easy to account for on account of the discrimination of the railroads in shipments of carload and less than carload lots, as no small tanner can exist under the present classification and difference in rates, of which I wish to submit some figures by way of illustration. I find that the rate on dry hides from Butte, Mont., to Chicago, on carload lots is $1.80, and on less than carload lots is $3.10. The rate from New York to Chicago on less than carload lots is 70 cents, and from Calcutta, India, to Chicago, $1.75, which goes to show that it isn't the 15 per cent duty alone that makes the price of hides, but the difference in freight rates of carload and less than carload lots charged the shipper, and the foreigner is protected by the railroads against the tariff. It compels the small shipper and butcher in the western country to sell his hides to the agents of the packers and trusts, who can wait until their accumulations amount to a carload before sending them to market.

The duty does not benefit the tanner, according to the appended statement, taken from the tanning corporations. These combinations produced about $45,000,000 worth of leather in 1900, but were unable to control the hide and leather market. There has recently been a reorganization of several of these companies into the Central Leather trust of which the Armours and Valentines are considered by the trade large holders, which reorganization was made necessary by the poor management, as shown by the statements of these companies.

In considering this subject it would be well for the gentlemen from Pennsylvania to look out for the leather industries of this State, as Pennsylvania ranks first in the Union in the production of leather (Pennsylvania produced in 1900 $55,615,009 worth of leather and employed 14,000 hands); also the gentlemen from Massachusetts, which State ranked second in this industry and produced in 1900 $26,067,714 worth of leather, by 7,010 employees; and the gentlemen from New York, which State with a production of $23,205,991 worth of leather, by 6,530 laborers, closely followed Massachusetts.

My colleagues from Wisconsin should bear in mind the leather industry of the Badger State, which ranks fourth, with a production in 1900 of $20,074,373 worth of leather, the product of 5,262 wageearners, which is three times as much as our exports to the Philippine Islands, for the protection of which trade there is required 119 officers, 5,096 men—the Philippine Scouts—and about $20,000,000 Navy investment. I would like to ask them if they are in favor of removing the tariff on hides and leather on a basis of the difference in cost of production? In 1890 there was in Massachusetts 1,057 shoe manufactories, employing 67,374 laborers. In 1900 there was 640 shoe manufactories, employing 58,645 laborers, the ages of some of whom, according to the census reports, were under 5 years. No doubt this decrease in Massachusetts was Republican prosperity for the shoe manufacturer, and the Republicans must appeal to them to continue this great prosperity. If the same proportion of factories, under this Republican prosperity howl, continue to go out of business as did in the last ten years, it will only take fifteen years to exterminate all the shoe factories in Massachusetts. If these manufacturers who are suffering under this high-tariff tax on hides, and the laborers connected with them, will go to the polls this fall and vote their convictions, no doubt they will be able to elect Democratic Members of Congress, who will, with our Members, revise the tariff.

The New York Post, in a recent issue, says:

The Central Leather Company, sometimes called the "leather trust," will, according to the statement of A. Augustus Healy, vice-president, cooperate with the National Shoe Manufacturer's Association in a movement for free hides. The manufacturers are ungrateful wretches, not content with the generosity of the protectionists who offer free goat skins, and they shamefully demand free hides also. They want what they want, even if they take the bread out of the mouth of the hungry Armour Packing Company. They offer the feeble pretext that the tariff on raw materials seriously cripples their business. So much the worse for their business. The Dingley tariff bill is a sacred institution. To pull out one stone may bring down the whole edifice. A manufacturer who asks for free raw material is therefore no patriot. The Central Leather Company is as shockingly selfish as the manufactures. "It is to our interests," says Mr. Healy in an interview, "that prices for raw material shall remain low."

I also find that by reason of this duty there was a great loss suffered by our oak-leather tanners, who had a large export trade built up in fine grades or oak sole, union crop, and Texas sole leather; also for our rough leather, and butts, used for belting and harness leather. All these grades require a fine texture of leather, and are made from domestic green salted hides, which are generally considered the best hides in the world, because they are well taken off and free from all blemishes. No rebate or bounty being allowed by our Government on leather made from domestic hides, this valuable foreign business was almost entirely destroyed, because the foreigner can buy his hides for from 10 to 15 per cent less, and buy oak bark and tanning material, and produce this class of leather much cheaper than we can.

All oak tanneries located in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and other oak-bark regions of the South and West suffered severely, also many of the tanneries in Louisville, Cincinnati, and Milwaukee, which made that class of leather a specialty to supply the foreign market. They were compelled to give up this trade at a great loss. This state of affairs also existed along the Canadian frontier, and it has been reported that some American tanners were compelled to move over into Canada in order to hold their foreign business, and tanning industries in that country have steadily increased. This militated against the American workman, and is a clear case of where protection doesn't protect. The present duty on hides is a positive injury to our trade, which, according to statistics, is the seventh ranking industry in the country in the amount of capital invested, and ranks tenth in the amount of wages paid.

It will thus be seen that a tariff ostensibly designed to protect labor becomes, in its practical operation, an injury to every one in the United States employed in the manufacture of shoes and other articles made wholly or in part of leather.

The conclusions to be drawn from the tables which I hereto annex are that the domestic supply of hides is inadequate and that large quantities of foreign raw material are absolutely necessary to continue in successful operation the shoe manufactories and tanneries of the United States and to provide employment for American labor.

The demand for free hides is not a sectional issue. The trend of shoe manufacturing and tanning is westward, and the most vigorous opposition to the hide duty comes from the States of the Middle West. The hemlock bark of Michigan and Wisconsin, the oak bark of the Southern States, and the immense forests of Oregon and California have caused a westward movement of tanning and shoe manufacturing to those States. In view of the development of trade with China and the Philippines, there would be much promise of a large extension of the export trade in shoes and leather from the Pacific coast if our ports could be open to the free entry of hides.

There is no civilized country on the face of the earth that produces hides enough to supply the demand and consumption of leather. Therefore, we must look to barbarous or semi-civilized countries for our supply of hides, such as South America and other countries. The supply of hides in this country comes from all over the world. No doubt we are tanning a great many from the European countries which they are buying from foreign markets, and which, were it not for the duty, would have originally been shipped here. Different kinds of hides in different parts of the world make different kinds of leather. We use for our sole leather the branded hides taken off in the western part of our country, and the Texas hides make the very best of sole leather, selling for a cent to 2 cents a pound more than any other hides, and they would sell for more if the people would protect themselves against the bad brands on them, and the grubs and ticks. In South America land is so cheap, and the herds of cattle so large, in proportion to the population, that hundreds of cattle are killed for their hides. The tanners and shoe manufacturers of the United States want these hides to come in free in order to afford labor to American workmen who will convert them into leather and shoes for the export trade.

The hide duty benefits the packer, the last one that needs it, according to good Republican authority, oft quoted in the newspapers and on the floor, as is shown by the following extract from a letter from Blaine to McKinley, dated April 10, 1890:

It is a great mistake to take hides from the free list, where they have been for so many years. It will benefit the farmer by adding 5 to 8 per cent to the price of his children's shoes. It will yield a profit to the packer only, the last man that needs it. The movement is injudicious from beginning to end, in every form and phase. Pray stop it before it sees light. Such movements as this for protection will protect the Republican party into a speedy retirement.

And in this connection I wish to give you, at this time, a few figures in regard to Swift & Co. The surplus on hand at the end of the year was $9,996,005 above the capital stock of $35,000,000, which represents a profit of over 25 per cent on the capital stock, not taking into consideration the investments they have in concerns to which they furnish the raw material, selling it to them for much less, so reported, than they will sell it to an outsider, and they intend to increase their capital stock another $15,000,000 this coming year.

When I was home in November, a farmer brought a hide to the tannery, for which I paid him $10.80. He had two quarters of beef with him and sold them in the village at 4 and 5 cents per pound, and told me that the two quarters of beef and the hide brought him more money than the butcher would pay for it. I asked the butcher if he could not afford to pay more for such cattle on the hoof. He told me no, that if he shipped it to Chicago there would not be over $2 profit on it, which would merely pay the expenses of taking it down there, and the risk attached to it, and he would come out whole if he had good luck. At the same time an agent of one of the large packing companies came up there to sell us stearine, a product of the packers, and I asked him what price he got for about this class of meat, and he told me about 6½ to 7½ cents, dressed. While here at Washington, I had the opportunity to go to the market for my own information and ask the price of meat, and I discovered that they were charging from 6 to 30 cents a pound for the different cuts. And still the Government report shows that the packers are doing business at almost a loss, and it surprises me that they don't ask for the 15 per cent duty to be continued on hides in order to keep them operating.

I annex prices showing the range of the price of steers in the Chicago market from 1885 and tables showing the price of beef and corn, which show that at no time in the history of the country have the feeders of heavy steers—a great many of whom are located in the district represented by the gentleman from Iowa—received as little for their cattle, in proportion to the cost of production, as at the present time, most of them being produced by feeding corn. Even during the extreme low prices during the "panic year," so called, of 1893, corn was selling for from $0.33½ to $0.44 per bushel, and it sold in 1894, which was a Democratic year with this terrible panic on that the gentlemen speak about, as high as $0.60½, and in the same year native steers, weighing from fifteen to nineteen hundred pounds, sold for $5.35 per hundred. In 1897 corn sold at $0.18½ to $0.31, and in 1900, the year in which he claims the farmers were so prosperous, the same class of steers sold for $5.55 and corn for from $0.30½ to $0.45½. Was it the Dingley tariff of $3.75 per head on cattle, or 27½ per cent ad valorem, that made these prices and protects them so they receive these prices for their cattle now? I will append a table showing the price of "canner" cows, of which he knows that we in Wisconsin, Iowa, and other Northwestern States ship a great many to market, and see how the figures in this great and prosperous Republican period compare with the figures in the Democratic years, based upon the prices for grain and other products, showing what it costs them, and he will easily see, after he studies these tables a minute, that the farmers in this country are getting no protection for this class of farm products, but are paying more taxes. The United States expenditures in 1895 were $433,178,426; in 1905 about $725,000,000. No doubt all were properous connected with this expenditure, which increased 90 per cent and the population about 10 to 15 per cent.

Hon. Ben Butterworth said, May 14, 1890:

The manufacturers and trusts get the protection and profits of the tariff; the farmer gets the husk and the humbug.

I would include in this, with the farmers, the tanners, shoe manufacturers, and laborers.

Low duties worked so well for fifty or sixty years that no party advised protection. This period was, as James G. Blaine called it, "the most prosperous in our history." The civil war was responsible for the return to the curse of protection, and it is the war's worse heritage.

Mr. Charles M. Schwab, the president of the billion-dollar steel trust, told the Industrial Commission in May, 1901, that all kinds of manufactured goods were always sold much lower for export than in the home market.

"Protection will make any nation that adopts it a nation of thieves." (Richard Cobden.)

"The truth is always the strongest argument." (Sophocles.)

"It may not be sentimental, but it is true that we have grown greater by staying at home and attending to our own business," said Senator JOHN C. SPOONER in 1898.

We may go further into this system and state that it is injurious to the manufacturers, laborers, and farmers of the country, as they produce everything and consume about 98 per cent of the products that are consumed by the people of this country; but through the iniquitous workings of this system less than 2 per cent of the people of this country are able to monopolize and come into possession of what the other 98 per cent produce. The presidents of three of the large life insurance companies, by withdrawing $50,000,000 of their money from the New York banks and putting it in safe-deposit vaults, could at once cause a panic such as this country never had in its history, and no law to-day could stop them from doing this. Homer, in English history, once said that no one man possessed power over another without abusing it.

You will find that we imported $17,000,000 more hides and skins last year than ever before. Again, I find, on looking over the Government reports, that there was, December 1, 1904, 17,572,464 milch cows in the United States, and on January 1, 1906, 19,793,866, an increase of about 15 per cent, caused on account of the high price of dairy products and the good crops of hay and other fodder that we have had for the last couple of years. There were very few shipped out, on account of the low prices of canner cows in Chicago during the year, which ranged from $1 to $2.75 per hundred, and at times were so low that the hides would bring as much as the packer paid for the whole animal. We ask, then, what has the hide to do with the price of cattle on the hoof, and how much profit is there on the meat when sold as embalmed beef to our Army and to our public at from 7 to 12 cents per pound when it costs the packer practically nothing?

We had of milch cows and other cattle over a year old January 1, 1905, 61,241,907. On January 1, 1906, we had 66,861,522, or an increase of 5,619,615 of cattle over a year old, or about what the packers killed in 1900. Now, what does this mean to the tanner and to the farmer and to the supply of hides?

First, if we have a good grass year this coming season, a heavy decline in butter and cheese will take place, unless we find a foreign market for our surplus or the wages of our laboring men are increased so they can consume more of these products (which, no doubt, will not happen), as, under the present condition of wages, they can't use much creamery butter made in my country at from 20 to 40 cents per pound retail, or cheese at 15 to 20 cents a pound, and if the farmers can't get somewhere near the present prices for these products they can't produce them at a profit and will not produce them; and hence a large run of canner cows into the Chicago market at a low price and a large supply of hides.

Should we have a dry season, they will be compelled to sell these cows for what they will bring. No one can tell what this will be, but I venture to state that it will be from 75 cents to $1.25 per hundred, or they will get for the cattle a price at about which the packer could sell the hide for to-day, with the 15 per cent duty, out of which he robs the tanner. The reason that he can get more for the hide than the farmer is because he skins and cures them, and handles them better in every way, and pays more attention to getting them in the best possible shape for market. It is claimed that the farmers of this country lose from 25 to 35 per cent of the value of the hides by negligent and careless handling and taking off, but are willing to ask Congress for a 15 per cent duty to cover them on the waste, and forget the fact that they don't get a profit and pay for it to the packer in the consumption of leather, as they consume more leather that pays duty than they produce hides that sell with the duty on.

Now, with these conditions existing, should we have a dry summer, the farmers won't have grass enough for these cattle, or should we have a large crop of grass and a heavy yield of dairy products, they will be lower. Either event will cause a good many farmers in my county, one of the greatest dairy sections in the United States, to reduce their herds of cattle, and force a large supply of hides, regardless of what the packers or the leather trust can do, until the low prices of leather will increase the use of that commodity, in different articles, to take care of this surplus which we are bound to get in a year or two, as it takes that long to put leather on the market out of the hide.

This will not be due to the 15 per cent duty, or because the Republicans have increased the expenditures of this country from $433,178,426 in 1895 to $720,105,498 in 1905, or about 80 per cent. In the Army and Navy the expenditures were $83,106,439 in 1895 and $222,864,803 in 1904, or an increase of about 170 per cent, which certainly did not benefit the manufacturing industries. Your expenditures for the last eight years, under this prosperous Administration for officeholders and everybody connected with the system, and with the high-protected industries, who no doubt furnish campaign funds to keep the voters greased and educated to protect the system under this boss rule, have been as follows: For the four years from 1898 to 1901, inclusive, $2,444,141,682; for the four years from 1902 to 1905, inclusive, $2,679,552,397, and you have increased the interest-bearing indebtedness from $716,202,060 in 1895 to $895,157,440 in 1904.

And in considering this question I find that you not only ask the tanners to pay a bonus to the packer trust, but also a bonus of 5 cents per pound to the borax trust, from the revenue on which the Government derives little or no revenue. I find, according to the census reports, that there was sold about $2,000,000 worth of borax, the manufacturers of which paid less than $114,000 for labor. They charged the American tanner 7¼ cents per pound for borax, where the foreigner is able to buy it at about 2½ cents. We collected $36,000 from the duty on borax last year, a small amount compared with what the tanners are robbed of through the high tariff. Who pays the tax and who gets the benefit? The present price of our borax in England is obtained from Mr. Ernest L. Fleming, a manufacturer and importer and exporter of borax, of Wareham, England, who says:

The duty of 5 cents per pound enables the borax trust to charge 7¼ cents here, while selling freely at 2½ cents in England.

We are compelled to pay the tariff, not only on this raw material, but on acids, of which we used $2,500,000 worth, and the duty on which is from 25 to 100 per cent ad valorem. On ammonia and other carbonates three-tenths of a cent per pound; on blackings of all kinds, 25 per cent; on bleaching and chloride of lime, one-fifth of 1 cent per pound; on coal tar and dyes, 20 per cent; on extracts, dyewood, of which we used $700,000 worth, and sumac, of which we used $434,447 in 1900, five-eighths of 1 cent per pound; on olive oil, 50 cents per gallon, and fish oil 8 cents per gallon, to protect the trust and Standard Oil Company, as they need the money; on barytes, $2.50 per ton; on blacks, 25 per cent ad valorem; on chromes, 4½ cents per pound; on lead, 2¾ cents per pound; on bichromate and chromate, 3 cents per pound; on nitrate of saltpeter, one-half cent per pound; on fire bricks, 35 per cent ad valorem; on cement, 20 per cent ad valorem; on fire glass, $3; on glass used for windows and tables, 40 per cent; on marble in block, which is also used for tables, 65 per cent; on grindstone, 75 cents per ton; on steel beams, 1 cent per pound; on pillar iron, 25 per cent; on all different iron products, table knives, and other steel used in tools for working leather, 50 per cent; on tacks and brads, 1½ cents per pound; on timber and other lumber, a great deal of which we are compelled to use from foreign countries, $2 per thousand; tallow and stearine, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, so the packer can sell the foreigner cheaper than at home; on paper, of which we use a great deal for wrapping up the leather, 1 cent per pound; coal, 20 cents, on which we pay not only a duty, but also a bonus to the trust, and the coal bill represents as much as 25 per cent of the labor employed. The tanner is protected, so he has free air, water, smoke, odor, and ashes, and skins for his raw product.

We are protected against all leather products, as enumerated in the bill, with a duty of from 20 to 40 per cent on all manufactures of leather, of which we import a very small amount, and the class that we do import being only the finest leather, and can only be used by the city trade, and does not enter into the consumption of the farmer and country trade at all. This makes no difference to the tanners of this country, and a great many of them have put themselves on record as being in favor of having this tariff on leather removed if the duty on hides was also removed. With this duty removed the tanning and leather industry, which is about the tenth ranking industry of the country, according to the census reports of 1900, and which is steadily on the decline, would be one of the greatest and foremost industries in the United States. We would be, within a few years, supplying all the leather consumed in the world, and would be using, no doubt, the bark that now comes off the log in the northern woods and is often burned up as waste, as there is no market for it on account of the surplus.

I hope that this Congress will see fit to remove these heavy burdens placed upon the leather manufacturers of this country. We are patriotic American citizens. We do not ask for the protection of the Stars and Stripes for nothing, and are willing to pay our share toward the maintenance of the Government; but we demand a system of equal taxation and honest competition, as we believe in that good old Jeffersonian doctrine of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none," and we don't believe the packers should be allowed to rob us consumers of leather of 15 per cent on all hides purchased from them, by reason of the duty.

Is it constitutional to destroy our property this way—all done by the Ways and Means Committee, who devise ways to tax you and adopt some means, through the subsidized press, to educate you that you don't pay the tax?

The Government receives no revenue from this at all. If we paid it direct to the Government, we would not protest so hard, but we do now, and openly, protest against this unjust system of taking our property, according to law, when we have no chance to defend our rights. Is it constitutional? I hope that all tanners and leather manufacturers who are being robbed by this system will go to the polls next November and protest against it, as I can not see a single thing in the whole system whereby the Dingley tariff bill or any other tariff bill ever created a dollar's worth of property. It has certainly taken it from some and given it to others, as the matter goes, and as I have endeavored to make plain in this speech. It is only a case of robbing one for the benefit of the other, and the only difference between this system of robbery and the old method in vogue in the early days in the West of holding a man up at the muzzle of a gun and demanding his property is that they now go and pass legislation and take one's property according to laws so passed by the bosses. And we protest against this unjust and unequal system of taxation, and, as stated before, we are not here asking for the support and protection of the American flag for nothing, but demand a "square deal" and freedom from boss rule.

I believe we are in favor of an income tax, notwithstanding that it was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court by a decision of five judges against four. By appointing two more judges to the bench of the same opinion as the four, it would no doubt be constitutional. Now, I ask to be informed—and I know there are many good, able lawyers over on the other side—if it is constitutional to charge a man who smokes a 5-cent cigar the same tax as a man who uses a 50-cent cigar, or a man who buys a gallon of whisky at $1.50 the same as a man who buys a gallon of whisky at $10? Is this constitutional? It is only a sample of this unjust system of taxation by which you raise all your revenues, the burden of which is carried by the poor man, who never enters court to contest this, because he never has money enough to hire a lawyer to do so.

By an income tax and the repeal of the tariff graft conditions would be remedied. Everyone should pay according to his income, and there is no oppressing any single individual by the present unjust system of taxation, which even goes so far as to drive them out of business. In February, 1903, according to the Boston Commercial Bulletin, a Republican for protection paper, 311 out of 375 boot and shoe manufacturers of New England declared in favor of giving up the tariff on shoes if hides were free, and of the New England tanners, 29 likewise declared in favor of relinquishing the duty on leather if hides were free, while only 11 opposed such action, because protection is a curse to the whole leather industry. According to the profits of the tanners in 1905, they probably didn't make to exceed from five to ten million dollars, and if they paid an income tax of 2 per cent on this, they would pay from $100,000 to $200,000, or at least $3,500,000 less than the packer trust is robbing them of to-day, and which, in the last eight years, has cost $30,000,000, or one-sixth what tanners have invested now, and could not sell their plants for $85,000,000, through the 15 per cent duty on hides. With the duty removed, they would have the free markets of the world to operate in, as competition is the life of trade, and free competition, low taxes, and low expenditure are what we are looking for, as with this we can control the leather markets of the world.

It is useless to state here at this time the manufacturer's position in this great strife for wealth, as less than 5 per cent of them are successful, and why? It is very easily explained, and I will endeavor to explain it in a few words, but could go into it in detail much further if necessary.

The average manufacturer begins business with a small amount of capital. He builds up a factory, which, when completed, is a monument to the city or village and a beehive for the people of that particular locality in which to secure a living, as he can not get more than a living out of it personally himself, and if he dies the plant still exists. He is then confronted with the proposition of securing raw material to operate his plant. This, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, requires more capital than he has. He goes to the bank, puts up his buildings and all his material as collateral for funds to run the business, thereby having only an equity interest in them, so to speak. He then starts in to manufacturing, and is forced to carry insurance on his buildings to cover the money he has borrowed and protect his equity, if he has any left. He is also forced to take out a line of life insurance, thus giving the McCurdys and others an opportunity to rob him, to protect his wife and family, as all of his property, in the event of his death, will go to his creditors, and ninety-five times out of a hundred will not pay the indebtedness. He then begins operations with these charges of interest and premium fixed upon him. Then he is put on the assessment roll by the city or village assessors and assessed and taxed for city, county, State, school, and all other home improvements at a valuation often far more than the property will sell for at any time, except to a trust, which is able to water the stock, no telling how much, and squeeze the public, if they control the production. He must then supply work for his laborers, who are dependent upon this industry for a living.

He is now ready to begin business, and is compelled to sell his product in the open market, and although he must pay cash for his raw material and pay cash for his labor and operating expenses, he must trust largely to the faithfulness of his laborers and the honesty of his customers for the payment of his goods. I have known of cases where we have shipped from our plant in Wisconsin a consignment of goods worth over $100, on which the profit was not over $2, to a man in California who was a total stranger to us, relying simply on the accuracy of the commercial reports as to his credit. If he wanted to be the least dishonest, he could refuse to accept the goods, and in order to adjust the matter he would have to have them returned to us at our expense, and we would have lost $2.50 on the transaction, as the freight charges would equal that amount.

We are compelled to help pay the railroads interest and dividends of about $800,000,000 per year, not including additional improvements and officers' salaries, on an actual investment claimed by some of the very best authorities not to exceed $6,000,000,000, of which $2,000,000,000 has been donated in land grants, leaving a net investment of $4,000,000,000, after the water is squeezed out, and this property is now capitalized and listed at about $14,000,000,000. It would suit the manufacturers of this country if a railroad rate was made by four commissioners appointed by the Government and four appointed by the railroads, who could get together and fix up an equal and just rate, fair to the shippers, as well as giving the railroads a reasonable return on the actual money invested, and not pay three or four prices on the watered stock. But this would be unconstitutional. Rather have the property of the manufacturers destroyed and call it constitutional.

In 1890 the total amount of capital invested in the manufacturing industries of the United States was $6,525,000,000. In 1900 it was $9,831,486,000. The increase in the capital invested in ten years was not as great as the expenditures in the last five years of the United States Government under this Republican prosperity.

I sat here in 1904 and listened to the great speeches made in regard to prosperity, and what the Republican party had done for the country through this high-protective Dingley bill. It is always necessary for a business man to take an inventory of all matters, and find out how he stands, as everything that we do is done for a commercial purpose, the same as the Government, for you can't show me a particle of legislation that doesn't almost always involve a money consideration of some kind. So it is a commercial proposition with the financial and political bosses all the time. I find that the failures in 1893 were not as many as they were, in proportion, in 1873, and I also find that the failures in the first quarter of 1904, in proportion to the wealth, were much greater than the failures in the first quarter of 1893, so-called "deplorable and panic year," but it was given out to the people in a different way through the subsidized press, to make them believe they were better off as to the conditions.

I find that the failures from 1872 to 1876, Republican years, aggregated $775,855,000, when we had a population of 50,155,789, and in 1880 the aggregate wealth given by the Census Bureau was $42,642,000,000, or the failures in proportion to the wealth were 1.8 per cent; per capita, $15.50, or 80 per cent more than in 1893 to 1897, in those so-called "panic years" of the Democratic Administration, when the total failures amounted to $934,364,629. The population was 76,303,387 in 1900; valuation, $94,300,000,000. Percentage of failures to valuation was 1 per cent. Per capita was $12.50, or about 80 per cent less than in 1873. Which panic was the greater? It can easily be stated by anyone who can figure. I also find that the failures in the year 1873 aggregated $228,499,990; wealth, census of 1870, $30,068,518,000. Failures in proportion to wealth about 0.76 per cent, which was 50 per cent greater than in 1893, so-called "panic year," when the failures were $346,779,889, and the wealth in 1890 was $65,037,091,000; proportion of failures to wealth, about one-half of 1 per cent. I find that the failures for the first quarter of 1904 were 3,344 in number, and the amount was $48,067,721. The wealth in 1900 was $94,300,000,000, and the proportion of failures to wealth was one-half of 1 per cent. This goes to show that the failures were greater, in proportion to wealth, than in the first quarter of 1893. And still they declare upon this floor about the great prosperity of the country. No doubt all manufacturers were very prosperous, with the total failures of the year amounting to 12,000 or 13,000. During the last eight years of this so-called "Republican prosperity" there have been 92,433 failures, or about 8 per cent of all the firms engaged in business, and a great many of them were undoubtedly caused by the unequal distribution of wealth, and being taxed to keep up the trusts and special favored industries which are allowed to rob them through the protective tariff and other legislation.

Now, I wish to state that I am part owner in a tannery established by my father in 1867, and we pride ourselves on being successful. I have been active in business ever since 1880—and am one of the eleven manufacturers in this body—having been taken out of school at that time to work in the tannery. I have lived and worked, slept and dined all my lifetime with the laborer, and I think I am more familiar with his conditions than most men upon this floor, and I am absolutely frank in regard to my statement of his conditions. I trust him on all matters quicker than I would the insurance presidents, some bankers, and other high financiers who were talked about so much in the 1896 campaign, a great many of whom are to-day, by reason of their violations of public trust and other crimes, confined in penitentiaries throughout the land, and especially one in our State, who was once president of the National Bankers' Association, and who is now serving time in a United States prison for fleecing his associates out of $2,000,000, and who was sentenced by one of his former personal friends, Judge Quarles, ex-Senator from Wisconsin. If I were to leave my home to-morrow morning I would gladly leave my tannery in the hands of my laborers, knowing that upon my return the plant would be there and still running, that every citizen, as well as my men, would be interested in seeing that it was carried on successfully, as we all, jointly, receive our living through it, and our success is due to our ability to go out and compete, with the small margin of profit that there is in the business at times, in the open market of this country. We jointly have the use of it to exchange our products with the farmer and the manufacturers for those of their products that we need, but some of which we are compelled to buy from these high-protected trust concerns, and at times it is hard to make both ends meet. How different it would be if it were left in the hands of these high financiers and trust promoters of Wall street—and there are as many honest manufacturers and shippers in New York as there are in any part of the world. If they could make more money out of it for themselves by closing it down, they would do so at once, and after robbing the men of their homes and their property would let them starve or walk to some other city to find work. One trust promoter, when organizing and attempting to persuade us to join him, told me that the trust would have the advantage of having more plants than they could operate, which would enable them to shut them down in different towns, thereby destroying the value of the laborer's property, and they could then come back later on and buy it for little or nothing, operate the plant, and in this way make considerable money. For a man who has been brought up with his laborers, knows them all by name, and would be willing at any time to sit down and keep their company or stand up and defend their rights, what inducement would this be to join one of these soulless corporations where they do not intend to know their men by name, but let them go by number or tag; where the laborer never sees the owner, and where a man's life is figured on the commercial basis? It was reported by the president of one of our great railways that improvements to guard the life of the laborers were never made until the death rate got so high that there was more money in making the improvements than in paying death claims, as the life of the average laborer killed in the performance of his duty is figured, in most of the States, at $5,000. I do not know what the price of slaves was in the early days, but if reports are correct their lives were valued much higher by their owners than the life of the laborer is valued by the average corporation to-day.

I have been fair and honest in these statements, made from a business standpoint in every way, and I want you to enact legislation so that the man who produces the wealth can enjoy the fruits of his labor.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says he is for tariff revision on a basis of the difference in cost of production. So am I, but I ask him if he intends to again vote for the rule established at this session of Congress, for which he has voted several times, I believe. If he does, how can he vote for tariff revision? Will he go home and tell his people that he voted for the rules and was compelled to stand with his party, of whom the bosses, of which there are practically but three, will always see that he will never have an opportunity to vote for revision of the tariff on anything as long as the party receives large campaign contributions? Is it not a fact that a man always serves his paymaster first and others second? So with the bosses. They must first serve the favored high-protected industries and railroads who contributed large campaign funds and whose names the Democrats on the committee have endeavored to secure, but up to the present time have not succeeded, and will not, as none of them invest money for any other purpose than to make money, and after the campaign seek special privileges, which are never denied them. Ask them for a donation for the poor and suffering in Japan, Russia, or India, and see how much they will contribute, but consider how much, during the famine in India, was contributed by the farm and laboring people of this country. There was no money for the trusts in such contributions and they did not interfere with the business of the trusts in taxing other people.

I warn you to grant the people the relief they are entitled to. In case you do not, you do not deserve the support of any man who is not connected with this system and controlled by the bosses. I hope that the people of this country will demand a vote on all important questions, and especially on all questions that appertain to the distribution of wealth, and I assure you that if you will grant it, you will not have the special privileges in existence longer than the time it takes to finish counting their ballots. If this is a country where the majority rules, I ask you to give the majority a chance. But I deny that the majority rules under this system. Not even a majority of the Members of Congress rules in this House under the present system, as has been so ably stated by my friends and fellow-Members here within the last few months, who could not be recognized by the Speaker at any time, and I hope that every Member who is returned to the next Congress will be absolutely and unqualifiedly opposed to, and vote against, this rule, which must be defeated in order to maintain our representative form of government.

APPENDIX A.

EXHIBIT A.

LEATHER SCHEDULE IN THE DINGLEY TARIFF BILL.

437. Hides of cattle, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That upon all leather exported, made from imported hides, there shall be allowed a drawback equal to the amount of duty paid on such hides, to be paid under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

438. Band of belting leather, sole leather, dressed upper, and all other leather, calfskins tanned or tanned and dressed, kangaroo, sheep, and goat skins (including lamb and kid skins), dressed and finished, chamois and other skins, and bookbinders calfskins, all the foregoing not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem; skins for morocco, tanned but unfinished, 10 per cent ad valorem; patent, japanned, varnished, or enameled leather, weighing not over 10 pounds per dozen hides or skins, 30 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem; if weighing over 10 pounds and not over 25 pounds per dozen, 30 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem; if weighing over 25 pounds per dozen, 20 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem; pianoforte leather and pianoforte action leather, 35 per cent ad valorem; leather shoe laces, finished or unfinished, 50 cents per gross pairs and 20 per cent ad valorem; boots and shoes made of leather, 25 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms, suitable for conversion into manufactured articles, shall be classified as manufactures of leather and pay duty accordingly.

GLOVES.

439. Gloves made wholly or in part of leather, whether wholly or partly manufactured, shall pay duty at the following rates, the lengths stated in each case being the extreme length when stretched to their full extent, namely:

440. Women's or children's "glace" finish, Schmaschen (of sheep origin), not over 14 inches in length, $1.75 per dozen pairs; over 14 inches and not over 17 inches in length, $2.25 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $2.75 per dozen pairs; men's "glace" finish, Schmaschen (sheep), $3 per dozen pairs.

441. Women's or children's "glace" finish, lamb or sheep, not over 14 inches in length, $2.50 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $3.50 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $4.50 per dozen pairs; men's "glace" finish, lamb or sheep, $4 per dozen pairs.

442. Women's or children's "glace" finish, goat, kid, or other leather than of sheep origin, not over 14 inches in length, $3 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $3.75 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $4.75 per dozen pairs; men's "glace" finish, kid, goat, or other leather than of sheep origin, $4 per dozen pairs.

443. Women's or children's, of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, not over 17 inches in length, $2.50 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $3.50 per dozen pairs; men's, of sheep origin, with exterior surface removed, by whatever name known, $4 per dozen pairs.

444. Women's or children's kid, goat, or other leather than of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, not over 14 inches in length, $3 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $3.75 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $4.75 per dozen pairs; men's goat, kid, or other leather than of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, $4 per dozen pairs.

445. In addition to the foregoing rates, there shall be paid the following cumulative duties: On all leather gloves when lined, $1 per dozen pairs; on all piqué or prix seam gloves, 40 cents per dozen pairs; on all gloves stitched or embroidered with more than three single strands or cords, 40 cents per dozen pairs.

446. Glove tranks, with or without the usual accompanying pieces, shall pay 75 per cent of the duty provided for the gloves in the fabrication of which they are suitable.

447. Harness, saddles, and saddlery, or parts of either, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, 45 per cent ad valorem.

DUTIES ON HIDES, SOLE LEATHER, AND SHOES—EXPRESSION OF OPINION FROM SHOE MANUFACTURERS REGARDING THE REMOVAL IN WHOLE OR IN PART OF THE DUTIES AFFECTING THE RAW MATERIAL AND FINISHED PRODUCT.

Early in December the Shoe and Leather Reporter sent a copy of the following letter and questions to the leading shoe manufacturers of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: We would respectfully call your attention to the inclosed letter from Mr. Charles H. Jones, president of Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Company, Boston, which appeared in the Shoe and Leather Reporter of December 7, and believe that you will be interested in reading his views on a subject of vital importance to the shoe and leather trade. In order to ascertain the present views of the shoe manufacturers of the United States on the hide and sole leather duties we ask the following questions. An expression of opinion is desired from every manufacturer, and we request the favor of an early reply.

Are you in favor of the repeal of the 15 per cent duty on hides and the 20 per cent duty on sole leather?

If you answer yes, are you willing to offer in exchange for these benefits to the shoe manufacturer the whole or any part of the 25 per cent duty on shoes?

As a result of the canvass 231 replies were received, as follows:

In reply to the first question:

Yes	199
No	4
Yes on hides, but only partial reduction sole leather	9
Noncommittal, and those not using leather in shoe making	19

In reply to the second question:

Yes—remove the whole duty if necessary	140
No	20
A part of the duty, ranging from 10 to 15 per cent	38
Noncommittal	33

Of these replies 96 were from New England shoe manufacturers and the remainder from those in the other States.

Quite a number commented on the topic, and believing that their views will be of interest we publish some of the comments herewith:

Snedicor & Hathaway, Detroit, Mich.: "Our idea would be, first get hides free, after that sole leather, and then take duty off shoes."

The Haynes-Webb Shoe Manufacturing Company, Denver, Colo.: "We certainly believe that the duty on hides, especially, should be abandoned. We would like to see a new bill put in effect."

Fargo Shoe Manufacturing Company, Belding, Mich.: "Am satisfied with condition that is best for the majority, only so it is settled and not brought up every little while to keep everyone guessing."

Andrews & Co., Everett, Mass.: "We have made no answer to the second question. The 'benefits' are all for the public and not the manufacturer."

Wichert & Gardiner, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "We have your circular letter of the 8th instant, relative to the repeal of duties, but are disinclined to express a lengthy opinion on this matter, as we have not gone sufficiently deep into its details. Our position would naturally incline us to favor a repeal of the 15 per cent on hides and 20 per cent duty on sole leather, believing that these measures would not be of very great disadvantage to those concerned in this line of business.

"With regard to the offering in exchange a surrender of the whole or any part of the 25 per cent duty on shoes, we should hesitate to express an opinion on a matter of so grave an import until some of the figures connected with it, and also some of the facts, were before us, on which a competent opinion might be based.

"It seems to us from the very fact that the United Shoe Machinery Company is placing its newest types of shoe machines in large quantities in all parts of the civilized world, that this fact, taken into consideration with the low price of labor prevalent in foreign countries, might be a good reason why the duty on shoes should remain undisturbed."

John A. Frye Shoe Company, Marlboro, Mass.: "We do not believe a reduction or repeal of the duty would benefit us at all, and so long as all shoe manufacturers are running to their fullest capacity with good profits, as they evidently are at the present time, we are in favor of 'letting the tariff alone.'"

The Pingree Company, Detroit, Mich.: "We are bending our energies to getting hides on the free list, and feel that at this time it is unwise to take up the question of free sole leather or free shoes, both of which would entail considerable inquiry. We do not feel competent to answer your questions concerning this without more information than we have at hand."

M. F. Hammond, Pleasantville, N. Y.: "With cheap material we can make a fair profit; with high material we stand a chance to get part of it back, but a very small proportion. The condition of the shoe trade to-day could hardly be worse, so far as the manufacturers are concerned."

The Comfort Slipper Company, New York: "A reduction of duty on slippers, especially on cloth and felt slippers, which are classified under shoes, will practically ruin our business, no matter how cheap sole leather may be. Therefore, if the reduction of duty can only be reached by a reduction of duty on shoes, we must be against it."

Jerolemon-Oliver Company, Rochester, N. Y.: "I should not be in favor of taking the duty off shoes coming to this country."

Hanan & Son, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "If the duty of 15 per cent on hides is removed, and the duty on sole leather reduced to 10 per cent, and duty for shoes reduced to 10 per cent, I believe it would meet with all the requirements and necessities of the situation."

The Rich Shoe Company, Milwaukee, Wis.: "We favor most emphatically the repeal of the 15 per cent duty on hides, which, in our opinion, is nothing more nor less than an arbitrary tax on the American boot and shoe manufacturer and is a protection only to the meat packer and incidentally to the foreign boot and shoe manufacturer, who receives a drawback on American-made leather of imported hides.

"We would further say that, while we favor the removal of the 20 per cent duty on sole leather, we would not object, as a fair compromise with the tanner, to return to the McKinley 10 per cent duty on sole leather instead of demanding the repeal of the entire present duty of 20 per cent.

"In consideration of the above we would be willing to take our chances to compete with the world in the sale of shoes without any protective duty whatever. We believe that with the exception of a small proportion of fancy slippers, etc., in which a good deal of hand work is utilized, the American manufacturer, in spite of higher labor, can produce goods of superior fit and style that would give the American goods such preference as to command the trade of the world; at least so it appears to us at the present time."

Pontiac Shoe Manufacturing Company, Pontiac, Ill.: "We believe it would be a good thing for the people to have free hides. We are a part of the people."

William Eastwood & Son Company, Rochester, N. Y.: "We are in favor of the repeal of the duty on hide and sole leather, and, in further response to your inquiry, would state that we are in favor of such a revision of the duty on shoes as can be consistently made without jeopardizing the interests of shoemakers in a general way—say to such an extent as the proposed repeal of the duty on hide and sole leather would enter into the cost of shoes."

Glesecke-D'Oench-Hays Shoe Company, Jefferson City, Mo.: "If our industries are to be encouraged, it seems to us that the Government would better not add additional burdens in the shape of revenue taxation on raw material. This is surely no encouragement to manufacturing enterprises. Our own Government handicaps us in our efforts to establish export trade by giving foreigners the opportunity to buy American leather cheaper than citizens of this country can purchase it. This, of course, is due to the rebate which the Government grants on export leather. This means the encouraging of one industry at the expense of another."

Neenah Shoe Company, Neenah, Wis.: "If the 25 per cent duty on shoes, or any portion of that duty, would prevent the removal of the duty on hides, we would say, Remove all of the duty from shoes, as we need not at present fear competition from foreign countries in the manufacture of shoes. The removal of the duty on hides we believe to be essential, and should not have been placed there in 1897."

Isaac Ferris, jr., Company, Camden, N. J.: "I fully concur in the opinion expressed by Charles H. Jones in Shoe and Leather Reporter."

Tappan Shoe Manufacturing Company, Lynn: "Shoes need no protection. Foreign shoes could not be given away in this country. They are ill shaped and not fitted for the trade in this country. Besides, shoes can not be produced in any country as cheaply as here."

The D. M. Jones Shoe Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio: "Yes, we are in favor of the repeal of all duties pertaining to the leather industry, and are willing to do what we can to that end."

Florsheim & Co., Chicago: "We are unqualifiedly in favor of the immediate repeal of the 15 per cent duty on hides, and also the 20 per cent duty on sole leather.

"It is a fact patent to almost all people identified with the shoe or leather industries that the repeal of the duty on hides without the repeal of the duty on sole leather would be more or less ineffective. It is absolutely essential that both the duty on hides and the duty on sole leather should be repealed in order to conserve the future of the shoe, leather, and harness business of the United States.

"In exchange we would be more than pleased to see the entire 25 per cent duty on shoes taken off. We require no protection as far as shoes are concerned. There should be none. It is a mere makeshift and sop. It does no good.

"We should have lower tariffs and more reciprocity, particularly with Canadian and South American republics."

Noyes-Norman Shoe Company, St. Joseph, Mo.: "If hides and leather should go much higher, would favor free list for hides, leather, and shoes. If a steady leather market now continues on about present basis, would be opposed to revision; shoes, leather, and hides are high enough; not much too high."

Racine Shoe Manufacturing Company, Racine, Wis.: "We believe the repeal of duty on hides is almost unanimous with shoe manufacturers. As to the duty on shoes, our trade is growing, with every country under the sun in open competition, and it does not seem that a duty on shoes is necessary."

Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Company, St. Louis, Mo.: "The repeal of the duty on hides will help. It is just as important that the duty on leather be also repealed."

Craddock-Terry Company, Lynchburg, Va.: "We heartily concur in Mr. Jones's forceful views on this subject."

Werthelmer-Swarts Company, St. Louis, Mo.: "We favor the repeal of the duty on hides and sole leather. Lowering the cost of making of shoes, competition will take care of prices."

Churchill & Alden Company, Campello: "Am anxious to have the duty taken off." (This firm replied "yes" to both questions.)

M. D. Wells Company, Chicago, Ill.: "If we can have free hides, would be willing to allow shoes to come free of duty."

A. B. Noyes & Co., Georgetown, Mass.: "If we have free raw material, we will risk all competition."

J. S. Zulick & Co., Orwigsburg, Pa.: "Haven't studied the question carefully, but Mr. Jones's views on the subject seem right and are plausible."

F. M. Hodgdon, Haverhill, Mass.: "It would seem that possibly in the far-distant future a duty of 10 per cent might be an advantage to equalize difference in cost of labor on shoes, but believe the probability is to the contrary."

Friedman Brothers Shoe Company, St. Louis, Mo.: "The duty off hides and sole leather will benefit everyone. The duty on shoes very few at present, and with the advantage of free hides the American manufacturer can meet any conditions that may arise through foreign competition."

H. R. Ford & Co., Lynn, Mass.: "We are heartily in favor of repealing the duty on hides and sole leather, and are willing to have the whole duty on shoes taken off, as we do not fear competition on cheap shoes. We know that the manufacturers of this country can hold their own in this line."

J. G. Hynds Shoe Manufacturing Company, Nashville, Tenn.: "The shoe duty does not help us any, and we do not believe it helps any other shoe manufacturer in the United States.

"The hide duty enables the beef trust, Big 4, to dictate prices on hides in the United States. Abolish the hide tariff and the beef and hide monopoly will not be enabled to 'hold up' tanners as they now do."

THE PROBLEM OF FUTURE PRICES.

As the old year draws to a close and will soon sink into history and as the new year looms on the horizon, thoughtful men in our trade are mingling with their holiday rejoicing serious conjectures as to what may be in store for the leather and leather-consuming industry. Every one, from the hide dealer to the consumer of shoes, harness, etc., realizes that 1905 was a year of advancing prices.

WILL PRICES DECLINE OR ADVANCE?

The past is an open book that all may read, but the future is a blank page. Will prices stick or will they decline? These are pertinent questions, but a more sensational interrogation presses for an answer—will the advance continue and will present prices look small and cheap a year hence?

It is difficult to set aside self-interest and consider trade movements dispassionately, but it would seem necessary at this time seriously to decide whether the higher prices already established resulted from natural causes that will continue operative or whether the advance movement has reached its apex. If the disruption in leather values logically resulted from world-wide conditions, why should it not continue?

NO AX TO GRIND.

Hide and Leather has no interest except to hold the mirror up to a great industry and faithfully to reflect things as they are. We do not venture to predict, but we do call attention to world-wide conditions that are likely to affect future prices. For two years Hide and Leather has been printing articles demonstrating that the per capita consumption of beef is not keeping pace with the per capita consumption of leather, with the result that hides and skins under the operation of the law of supply and demand are increasing in cost in all the markets of the world.

MORE SHEEP, LESS BEEF.

With a view to further substantiating or disproving this postulate we have interviewed M. F. Horine, official statistician of the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, Chicago. He tells us that his company does not expect any considerable increase in the cattle supply, for the reason that the demand for beeves on the hoof and the prices paid do not furnish any incentive to stock raisers to increase their herds. Mr. Horine gives a variety of reasons why the cattle and beef industries are not expanding proportionately with the population of the country. He deplores the widespread daily newspaper attacks upon the so-called "beef trust," and says that these, together with the stories abut embalmed beef printed during the Spanish-American war, prejudiced the American public against dressed beef. In this connection he adduces the fact that receipts and slaughter of sheep have increased in much greater degree than those of cattle. In 1888 receipts of cattle at the great stock yards of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, and St. Louis were 4,477,470 head. In 1904 the entry at these centers amounted to 7,274,110. Receipts of sheep at the four points in 1888 were 2,307,050 head, and in 1904, 8,050,900 head. From these figures it will be seen that receipts of cattle have not quite doubled in sixteen years, while receipts of sheep have almost quadrupled.

NO BEEF FOR BREAKFAST.

The introduction of cereal breakfast foods has probably not been sufficiently considered as a factor in revolutionizing the food supply of the American people. There are said to be sixty-two manufacturers of cereal foods at Battle Creek, Mich., alone. It is only necessary to visit any one of the thousands of small grocery stores and glance at the shelves to form some idea of the tremendous consumption of prepared cereals.

EFFECT OF IRRIGATION AND REFRIGERATION.

Irrigation has become an important factor in the food supply. Thousands of acres that formerly were used for cattle feeding are now yielding cereals and table vegetables. The refrigerator car has made possible the transportation of perishable articles from long distances, and the cold-storage plant enables dealers to hold such merchandise for sale, so that eggs, poultry, fish, fruit, and fresh vegetables are obtainable by the American people practically during every month of the year. All these circumstances tend to lessen the per capita consumption of beef, and this reduces the supply of hides and skins available for making leather.

MORE LEATHER, BUT LESS RAW MATERIAL.

Coincident with this limitation of raw material is the greatly expanding consumption of leather. In recent years leather has come into great favor for upholstering fine furniture, as well as for mural decorations. A tanner of leather for automobiles recently told us that the sales of his company were just fifteen times greater than one year ago. Foot gear has been made for so many years at such reasonable prices that the per capita consumption of leather has increased by reason of the fact that nearly everyone possesses a number of pairs of shoes. There are shoes for every vocation and sport, and fashionable ladies have foot gear to match every gown.

CHEAP BEEF—DEAR HIDES.

Hides and skins are in less supply and greater demand in all the markets of the world, a condition that is faithfully reflected in the markets. The increasing demand for hides and the decreasing demand for beef are reflected in the selling prices of hides and cattle on the hoof. During 1893 native steer hides ranged from 5½ to 9 cents in price, while the steers themselves brought from $5.25 to $6.50 per hundred pounds. To-day we find beeves on the hoof bringing about the same prices as twelve years ago, while the hides are closely sold up at 16 cents. Years ago hides sold for little more and sometimes for even less than beef, but to-day steers that sell for 5½ cents per pound on the hoof yield hides that easily bring 16 cents per pound.

It must be admitted that the increasing cost of leather has a substantial basis in conditions affecting the quantity of raw material available. As we said at the outset, the question for every thoughtful man in the trade to endeavor to answer for himself is, Will the upheaval in prices during 1905 continue in the same or greater degree during 1906?

APPENDIX C.

BRITISH POLITICIANS ON AMERICAN SHOE TRADE—EFFECTS OF OUR TARIFF AS SEEN THROUGH ENGLISH SPECTACLES.

[From the Shoe and Leather Reporter.]

As I have said, opinions on the tariff question are much divided, even among manufacturers; as far as the operatives are concerned, however, I fancy the vote will go solid for free trade at the election. British shoemakers have always been advocates of liberal principles, and it seems most unlikely they will be won over by any arguments in favor of protection. Speaking at a small army-shoemaking center called Raunds recently, F. A. Channing, the late member for the division, dealt extensively with the aspect of American shoe trade and its position under a protective tariff. The speech appears to me to be so directly interesting to your readers that I am tempted to give rather copious extracts from it. Mr. Channing prefaced his remarks by observing that he had only recently returned from a tour of the United States, which included an inspection of the shoe industry of Massachusetts—"the Northamptonshire of the United States." He said this district was exactly in the same position, and had been for the past ten years, in which Mr. Chamberlain wanted to place the whole of this country. He went on to say Massachusetts resembled England in the sense that the greater portion of its food and raw material came from outside. She had been placed under a complete scientific tariff protecting every industry in the country. They had had ten years of protection, and what was the result? The whole of the workmen and nine-tenths of the manufacturers of that State engaged in the shoe industry were eagerly demanding a complete and absolute withdrawal of the system. The feeling was of the strongest possible kind against protection, because it was felt its burdens were far greater than any advantage the duty gave them. Mr. Channing went on to say that whilst he was in the State an election was in progress, and that turned on the question which of the two parties—Republicans and Democrats—were the most in earnest in getting rid of protection from that highly protected State. Until the Dingley tariff was adopted the boot and shoe industry was going up by leaps and bounds. The increase was 80 or 90 per cent in the ten years before the tariff, but now the growth of the industry was almost suspended and the number of employees and the amount of wages had decreased. They got the advantage of 25 per cent duty, yet they had to pay an enormous duty on coal, although they could otherwise have coal for very little by sea from Canada. They were prevented from getting steel and timber at terms reasonable enough for the construction of factories and machinery, and the raw materials, hides, or finished leather, were subject to a heavy duty, which largely increased the cost of production.

TRUSTS FROM A BRITISH STANDPOINT.

This champion of the British shoemakers was particularly caustic in his observations on American trade combinations. Alluding to the beef trust he said it had bribed the legislators to impose a duty of 15 per cent on raw hides, and were thus enabled to impose a blackmail of £2,000,000 on every industry of which leather was the raw material. Passing to the leather trust, he said that no sooner did it become powerful than the beef trust bought them up. The leather trust had a duty of 20 per cent on all leather imported into the United States, and got a rebate of 90 per cent on the raw hide, which they converted into leather and exported to England. The result was that English manufacturers, with their happy system of free trade, got the American leather 15, 20, to 25 per cent cheaper than the American manufacturers could get their leather, which was manufactured in America. At the conclusion of his speech to these British army shoemakers, Mr. Channing said these precious tariffs handicapped the American manufacturers and gave the English command of the markets of the world. "They need not be afraid," he added, "that these poor American manufacturers were going to slip out of the toils and compete with them in the near future, for no toad under the harrow was half so badly off as the American shoe industry under the combined forces of the gigantic trusts which used protection as their weapons."

I give the above opinions for what they are worth; they are, however, from two representative men, and show that American shoes and leather are playing an important part in shaping the destiny of British economic policy. Mr. Channing may be "playing to the gallery," as we say in England, but his opinions are given with a frankness which leaves no doubt as to his opinions. Whether his probably superficial inspection of American industrial conditions was sufficient to make him an authority on the effects of protected leather it is difficult to say, and I leave American readers to form their own opinions.

APPENDIX D.

LEATHER TRUSTS.

The United States Leather Company, a corporation formed under the laws of New Jersey, February 25, 1893, acquired the properties of a large number of companies and firms engaged in the manufacture of leather. The property consists of real estate, tanneries, bark lands, hides, bark, etc.; stock, par $100; authorized, common, $64,000,000; preferred, $64,000,000; issued, common, $62,882,300; preferred, $62,282,300; total, $125,164,600.

The preferred stock is 8 per cent, cumulative. Stock is transferred at the office of the company, New York. Registrar, Central Trust Company, New York.

The amount of stock originally authorized was $60,000,000 each of preferred and common. In July, 1895, an increase of $4,000,000 in each class was authorized to provide for purchase of bark lands, etc.

During 1895 6 per cent was paid on preferred, and in 1896 1 per cent. In 1897 4 per cent was paid on preferred, and in 1898 4¾ per cent. In April, 1898, dividend was increased from 1 to 1¼ per cent. In 1895 5 per cent was paid on the preferred. In 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, and 1904 6 per cent was paid. The dividend paid January, 1905, was 1½ per cent, being also on the 6 per cent annual basis. The amount of dividends overdue on the preferred January 1, 1904, was about 41 per cent. Dividends on the preferred are paid quarterly, in January (1), April, July, and October. (See below regarding details of the reorganization plan dated December 17, 1904.)

On December 17, 1904, a committee—P. Anderson Valentine, chairman; Edward C. Hoyt, A. Augustus Healy, W. G. Garritt, Eugene Horton, Samuel P. Davidge, Lewis H. Lapham, Frederic P. Olcott, Alvin W. Krech, and George Foster Peabody—submitted a plan of reorganization. It provided for a new company to acquire the assets of the old one, or to control it through a majority of the stock, the new company to have $45,000,000 twenty-year 5 per cent bonds, $40,000,000 7 per cent, cumulative, preferred stock, and $40,000,000 common stock.

Under the plan, holders of the old preferred were to exchange it for 50 per cent in new preferred, 50 per cent in new bonds, and 25½ per cent in new common, and the old common stock was to be exchanged for the new in the proportion of one share of new for three of the old common stock. The old 6 per cent debentures were left undisturbed. The capitalization of the new company would be as follows, if all holders of the stock accepted the plan: Five per cent bonds, $31,141,150; new preferred, $31,141,150; new common, $14,636,340, the latter including $6,200,000 of stock to be given to new interests in the company for cooperation and for all services and expenses in carrying out the plan.

The depositary of the committee was the Central Trust Company, New York, and deposits of the old stock were to be made over before February 15, 1905, the plan having been declared operative.

FUNDED DEBT.

Debentures, 6 per cent, due May, 1913, May and November, $5,280,000.

The issue of debentures was to provide the company with working capital. The bonds are subject to redemption by a sinking fund of 4 per cent annually, and bonds can be drawn for it at 110. There were, on December 31, 1904, $600,000 of the bonds in the company's treasury.

Report for the year ending December 31, 1902, gave profits $4,702,384. In 1903, profits, $4,784,998.

American Hide and Leather Company, a corporation formed under the laws of New Jersey in August, 1899. The company acquired the plants and business of twenty-two different establishments engaged in the manufacture and sale of upper leathers, particulars of which are given in the manual for 1901.

The establishments acquired represented 75 per cent of the business in upper leather in the United States. In each case the properties acquired were taken in fee clear of all incumbrances. The aggregate annual net earnings of the separate concerns before consolidation were $1,585,748. Stock, par, $100; authorized, common, $17,500,000; preferred, $17,500,000. Issued, common, $11,274,100; preferred, $12,548,300; total, $23,822,400.

The stock preferred is 7 per cent, cumulative, and has a preference as to assets. At the beginning of 1905 the accumulated unpaid dividends amounted to about 35 per cent.

Transfer agents, North American Trust Company, New York; Colonial Trust Company, New York.

The first dividend on the preferred stock was 1 per cent, paid February 15, 1905. It was understood that this was a quarterly dividend, and that the stock had been placed on a 4 per cent basis.

FUNDED DEBT.

First mortgage, 6 per cent, due September, 1919, March and September, $7,837,000.

The first mortgage is for $10,000,000. Of the bonds outstanding, $2,445,000 were accepted by vendors of the property acquired by the company in payment for same, $3,200,000 were disposed of privately, and $2,800,000 were sold in January, 1900, by public subscription. Of the bonds held in the treasury, $1,000,000 only can be issued for the acquisition of new properties, which shall become subject to the mortgage. The trustee of the mortgage is the Colonial Trust Company, New York, interest being paid at that institution. There is a sinking fund of $172,500 per annum. Bonds may be bought for the sinking fund at not over 115, but are not subject to compulsory retirement. On June 30, 1903, there were $494,000 bonds in the sinking fund.

In the year ending June 29, 1901, the surplus over charges was $377,139. In the year ending June 30, 1902, the total profits were $1,411,511; interest and deductions for depreciation, etc., $1,004,634; balance, $406,877. In 1902–3 profits were $886,114; interest, deductions, etc, $965,748; balance, deficit, $79,634. In 1903–4, profits, $1,204,601; deductions, $913,329; balance, surplus, $291,272. Total surplus, June 30, 1904, $838,155.

EXHIBIT H.

[The figures given below were taken from the Statistical Abstract for 1904.]

In 1891 the average farm value of hogs was $4.15. January 1, 1893, under Democratic rule, was $6.41, and January, 1894, was $5.98, two Democratic years, against January 1, 1904, of $6.15, and January 1, 1905, $5.99, in these prosperous years. How much more are the farmers' hogs worth than they were before, and how much did the tariff add to their value, when the price of corn had increased wonderfully?

How much better off is the farmer selling a bushel of timothy seed that he was able to get for in 1893 an average price of $3.85 and in 1894 $4.80, in 1895 $4.84, in 1896 $3.04, against $2.88 last year, under these prosperous times?

How much better off are the farmers who owned, according to the agricultural report, January 1, 1893, 35,954,196 head of cattle other than milch cows, at a value of $547,882,204, an average of $15.25, than the farmers who owned January 1, 1905, 43,669,443 head of cattle other than milch cows, valued at $661,571,308, an average of $15.15?

How much better off are the farmers who in 1893 had 16,424,087 milch cows, at a value of $357,299,785, or an average of $22 per head, against 16,292,360 in 1900, at a value of $514,812,106, which averaged about $31.50, and against the farmers that had in 1905 17,572,464 head, at a value of $482,272,203, or an average of $27.50?

The price of sheep, of which there was 47,273,553 in 1893, valued at $125,909,000, an average of $2.70, against 41,883,065 in 1900, valued at $122,665,913, an average of about $2.90, and in 1905, the most prosperous year, 45,174,423, valued at $127,331,850, an average of about $2.80.

In 1893 we had 16,206,202 horses, worth $992,225,185, an average of $62 per head, and in 1900, a prosperous year, had 13,537,524, valued at $603,969,442, an average of $45, and in 1905 we had 17,057,702, at an average of about $70. Was it Republican prosperity that made the price $45 in 1900 and $62 in 1893, and $70 in 1905, or was it due to the wars all over the world that created an extra demand for them, that they sold for an average price of $80.72 in 1906, or was it because the horses are better, as most of them are sold for working on the farms, no doubt?

The price of hides is, after all, the best index of supply and demand. It will be observed that South American hides were dearer in 1905 and 1904 than at any time in twenty years. It should be interesting and instructive to readers of Hide and Leather to discover that conditions affecting the supply and cost of hides are substantially the same in South America as in our own country.

THE SUPPLY OF PACKER HIDES.

The actual slaughter of cattle at five leading western packing points for 1905 shows an increase of 295,090 head from 1904, but a decrease of 127,772 head from 1903. This table gives the detailed figures:

Slaughter of cattle at five points for three years.

	1905.	1904.	1903.
Chicago	2,002,273	1,939,152	2,163,031
Kansas City	1,244,775	1,012,665	1,033,384
Omaha	681,757	642,277	766,870
St. Joseph	367,916	406,467	404,937
St. Louis	765,162	766,232	821,433
Total	5,061,883	4,766,793	5,189,655

It is evident from this showing that the supply of packer hides is not keeping pace with the increased consumption of leather caused by the increased population and prosperity of the country.

[Letters from harness manufacturers showing quantity and value of leather used in heavy harness.]

ST. LOUIS, January 18, 1906.

Mr. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your kind favor of 15th to hand. In response to same we give you herewith weight of the leather used on the heavy farm-team harnesses. Weight of same would be from 35 to 45 pounds, according to the grade. The value of the leather would be 45 cents per pound for cut stock, based on to-day's prices of harness leather. In order to make one dozen heavy full-leather horse collars it would take from 85 to 90 feet of collar leather, which is worth to-day 19 cents per foot.

Trust information is satisfactory. If anything further is required, we shall be pleased to furnish same, and remain,

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 19, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your communication of the 15th would state the amount of leather used in a heavy team harness ranges, according to the style and dimensions, from 35 to 60 pounds. Think the average for this section is about 45 pounds per set, for two horses, and costs (cut stock), not counting labor for cutting, if average good stock is used, $22.50 at the present price of leather. The labor on an average-priced team harness, by hand, about $6.50 per set. A good ordinary team horse collar has 85 feet of leather, which is worth $17. Labor, from $5.50 to $6.50 per dozen.

It seems to the writer, when we consider according to the best statistics at hand, there is a world shortage on hides, and especially when the price of cattle is not at all based on the value of the hide, which is considered a by-product only and really benefits only the large packers, who control both the hide and leather market to-day, the tariff ought to come off. There is no considerable number of people benefited by high-priced hides, as the percentage of country hides taken off is very small indeed compared to a few years ago before the time when large packers inaugurated their present system of furnishing dressed beef to all the small markets throughout the country, thereby cutting off the local killing by the small butchers. The heavy increased demands for different kinds of leathers has during the past two years made it very difficult for manufacturers to secure sufficient quantity of certain kinds of leather to supply their needs. Tanners outside of what is ordinarily called the trust claim that they are unable to secure hides at a price sufficient to run their tanneries at a full capacity.

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

CHICAGO, January 17, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours 15th instant, the cost of leather in producing heavy farm team harness is from $10 to $20 per set, the labor from $3 to $6 per set. For heavy full-leather horse collars, cost of leather is from $15 to $20 per dozen, and labor from $4 to $10 per dozen.

This information is not definite, but there is considerable difference as to both cost of materials and labor depending upon the grade and heft of the harnesses and collars.

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 19, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of the 15th, will say that in a single set of heavy farm team harness there is about 40 pounds of leather, at about a valuation of 45 cents per pound. In a dozen full-leather horse collars there is about 100 feet of collar leather, at 21 cents per foot.

Trusting this will be satisfactory, we remain,

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

EXHIBIT B.

[Letters from manufacturers of plow shoes and plow boots, showing quantity of leather used and its value per pair.]

MILWAUKEE, WIS., U. S. A., January 20, 1906.

Mr. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Sheboygan Falls, Wis.

DEAR SIR: We have your favor of the 15th instant, inquiring as to the amount of leather used in producing heavy grain-leather plow shoe and boot.

It takes fully 2¼ feet to cut a regular height (6 inches) plow shoe, and for the lowest plow boot we make, which is 14 inches, it takes fully 4¼ feet of leather. The leather we are using now costs 19 cents a foot.

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

CHICAGO, January 18, 1906.

Mr. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of the 15th, figures such as you ask for necessarily will vary in different institutions, according to the size of the last, height of shoe, and quality. Those we give below are the ones in use in our establishment, and apply to standard height, last, and quality made for workingmen.

Six and one-half to 7 ounce western oil grain is used, for which we are asked 18½ cents per foot, with the usual discount. It requires about 2¼ feet per pair; about quarter of a foot for the gusset, or tongue, which is cut out of 7-cent leather. The strap on leather is usually got out of scrap which falls from the cutting of the sides. On shoes made plain, without any trimmings, the above constitute all the leather in the upper.

In sole leather it is hard to give any idea of the amount, for different stocks are used for outsoles, slip soles, counter, and heels, and the total weight in the shoe can only be arrived at by footing up the estimates for these different parts and dividing by the average cost of the leather. In this way we arrive at about 2¼ pounds. As to cost, there is considerable variation, according to the quality of the leather used. An outsole cut from leather tanned from South American dry hides, at 24½ cents per pound, to-day's market, would cost about 24 cents per pair on our dies; inner soles, about 7½ cents; slip sole, 6½ cents; the counter, at 7½ cents; the heel and top lift, 10 cents; total of 56 cents. If domestic-slaughter sole leather is used, about 2½ cents shoud be added to the allowance for the outsole.

The amount of stock used in boots varies according to the height. We have made boots which take only 5¼ feet per pair, and from that up to 6. These would be cut from 7½-ounce oil grain sides, which are to-day quoted at 20 cents per foot, with the usual discount. This brings the cost of the upper from $1.05 to $1.20. To the sole-leather estimates about 12 to 15 per cent should be added on account of the heavier weight required for boots.

Trusting that this information will be satisfactory, and ready to serve you further,

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

Three thousand October hides shipped by one dealer average 50 pounds, including all selections 25 pounds and up. ——— ———.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 15, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Shipments of hides received from small packer in Montana to-day. After sorted 25 pounds and up, the hides, 1,055 green salted, averaged 56½ pounds.

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 16, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The hides sold in Kansas City during the month of October and September, this year, 25 pounds and up, averaged 48 to 50 pounds.

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

DAYTON, OHIO, January 16, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE.

DEAR SIR: Our hide collections in September, 1905, averaged 52 pounds for 25 and upward. Indianapolis collections averaged about the same. ——— ———.

[Letters showing ocean freight rates on green and dry hides, loose and baled.]

NEW YORK, January 22, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your esteemed favor of the 20th instant we beg to quote you the following freights:

Dry hides from Mexico, loose, 20 cents each and 5 per cent primage.

Dry hides from Mexico, when baled up, three-fourths cent per pound plus 5 per cent.

W. S. hides from Mexico, three-eighths cent per pound plus 5 per cent.

Dry hides from Central America, in bales, 1¼ cents per pound net.

Dry hides from South American ports, 12½ cents each plus 5 per cent, and light-house dues 86 cents per ton, wharfage 12 cents per ton. These are export entry charges.

If we can get you any further information, please command us.

Yours, truly,

_____ _____.

NEW YORK, January 23, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your previous inquiry about freight rates, we give you below the following quotations, which we received this morning, and which we hope will be of service to you:

From Calcutta: Buffalo hides, 60s. per 14 hundredweight; goatskins, 70s. per 14 hundredweight.

_____ _____.

NOTE.—Sixty shillings equal $14.75; 70s. equal $17.20.

NEW YORK, January 17, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE,
Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our communication regarding the freight rates, our freight agent gets us the following:

London to New York, goatskin hides, 15s. plus 10 per cent for 2,240 pounds (on deck).

New York to Milwaukee, goatskin hides, 30 cents per 100 pounds, minimum 30,000 pounds; less than carload, 35 cents per 100 pounds.

London to New York, dry hides, loose, 27.6s. plus 10 per cent; in bales, 22.6s. plus 10 per cent.

New York to Milwaukee, dry hides, loose, 50 cents per 100 pounds; in bales, 35 cents per 100 pounds; minimum, 20,000 pounds.

If we can be of any service to you here, please command us.

We are importing dry Batavia cowhides, very spready, about 8 pounds average, which we have sold very extensively in your neighborhood, and we expect some in next month, and can offer you about 1,000 of them, subject to previous sale, at 36 cents per pound.

If you are interested in them, kindly advise us.

Hongkong-New York rates are not obtainable here, but we estimate 25 per cent for green salted.

Yours, truly,

_____ _____.

[According to the above letter of January 17, the rate on green salted hides from London to New York is 15s. plus 10 per cent for 2,240 pounds (on deck), which is about 33 cents per hundred, or 68 cents per hundred to Milwaukee in less than carload lots, against a rate of $2.10 for less than carload lots from Butte, on green salted hides to Chicago, and a rate of $2.20 on less than carload lots on green salted hides from Salt Lake City, making a difference in the stock about the same as the difference in the tariff, or, according to the average country hide prices since the duty has been on, making a difference in the value of hides from there about the same as the duty, and the man from Butte, Mont., doesn't receive any more for his hides if he ships them to Chicago than the man from London, England, who ships to Chicago, which is the greatest hide market in the world. How does the 15 per cent duty protect the man in Butte, and isn't it the railroads that fix the price?]

APPENDIX I.

A comparison of the world's cattle statistics—Tabulation of official returns.

[Alfred Seymour Jones in the London (England) Leather Trades Review. Reprinted in Hide and Leather, issue of January 27, 1906.]

WHY HIDES ARE DEARER.

"I am inclined to say that the increase in cattle has not kept pace with the constantly increasing demand for leather brought about by increase in population, new industries, factories, and wealth." (Alfred Seymour Jones, English leather trade authority.)

Much has been said and written to explain the cause of, or causes for, the advance in the values of hides during recent times. Among the causes advanced the following have been especially urged: That the birth rate of cattle has not kept pace with the birth rate of human beings. That when a country becomes a manufacturing area it does so at the expense of the depletion of the head of cattle. That rinderpest and drought have caused serious losses. That more people to-day buy leather than formerly. That war, during recent years, has, at least in two countries, accounted for large declines in local herds.

In order to ascertain whether these causes are good we must take the official returns for all those countries which at present furnish them, and at the same time compare in a relative sense the demands of the population for leather.

In all cases I give the maximum head first, then the minimum, and when necessary the latest returns. The figures are extracted from official returns during the past twenty-five years. The comments following each are my own.

THE UNITED KINGDOM.

1905	11,674,026
1882	9,832,417

The progress of increase has been steady for over twenty-five years, and the total head has never been so large as it is to-day.

It is interesting to note, and to remember, when comparing the figures for the United States, that the British board of agriculture say, "The live imports of cattle for 1904 numbered nearly 550,000 head, or 27,000 more than for 1903. The increase came from the United States, whence 100,000 more cattle were received than in 1903, equal to 72 per cent."

We will now turn our attention to the four leading continental countries.

Russia in Europe, including Poland and Caucasia.

RUSSIA.

1900	32,913,228
1883	23,628,031
1903	32,791,700
1904 (estimated)	30,858,410

POLAND.

1888	3,013,392
1903	2,887,400
1904 (estimated)	2,349,524

CAUCASIA.

1903	3,625,600
1900	3,515,590
1904 (estimated)	2,892,841

The official Russian returns for 1904 show a decline, and from my knowledge of that country I should put the reduction down to the unsatisfactory political situation which has existed there for some years past, but with the establishment of good government the total head of cattle should be largely augmented. The country is especially suited to the rearing of cattle.

GERMANY.

1900 (latest)	18,939,692
1873	15,776,702

I have gone back thirty years in the case of Germany to ascertain if there is any justification for the plea that "when a country has become a manufacturing area it does so to the depletion of the head of cattle."

I think no one will deny that the Fatherland, since the war of 1870, which brought her unity, has become a large manufacturing country. Yet from 1873 up to date, each year shows a steady and progressive increase in her cattle.

FRANCE.

1902	14,928,550
1885	13,104,970
1903	14,103,090

The increase has been continuous up to 1902.

AUSTRIA.

1900 (last)	9,506,626
1869	7,425,212

HUNGARY.

1895 (last)	6,783,365
1870	5,279,193

In the instance of Austria I had to go as far back as 1869 to find the minimum. It is regrettable that both countries afford no later dates than those given, but each country shows a remarkable and steady increase.

In referring to the above countries, the British board of agriculture says: "So far as the head of the five leading European countries are concerned, viz, Russia in Europe, Germany, United Kingdom, France, and Austria, there would appear to have been a general advance in numbers. The combined heads are greater by nearly 22 per cent than they were some thirty years ago. If the older figures may be trusted, the percentage of rise in Austria was the greatest, or something like 28 per cent, as against 20 per cent in France and Germany and 13 per cent in our own country."

UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.

1900	67,822,336
1870	23,820,608
1905	61,241,907

"The heads of the United States have, according to the official data, shown no growth whatever since this country began," say the British board of agriculture.

It will perhaps be of interest if I give the statistics since 1870:

1870	23,820,608
1880	29,675,533
1890	57,648,792
1900	67,822,336

The above are census figures. The census of 1900 included spring calves, a procedure, it is explained, adopted in only a few instances in the enumerations of 1890, 1880, and 1870.

1902	61,424,599
1903	61,764,433
1904	61,049,315
1905	61,241,907

It appears to me that had the annual census been taken on 1900 basis there would have been no falling off, but a fairly steady total during the past five years.

CANADIAN DOMINION.

1901 (last)	5,576,451
1891	4,120,586

The data collected at the census for the following provinces do not agree with those published by the provincial governments, consequently are not comparable with above:

ONTARIO.

1904	2,776,104
1881	1,702,167

The increase has been constant annually.

MANITOBA.

1903	310,577
1902	282,343
1904	306,943

NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

1901 (last)	591,739
1891	231,827

NEW BRUNSWICK.

1901 (last)	227,196
1891	204,692

NEWFOUNDLAND.

1901 (last)	32,767
1891	23,828

NOVA SCOTIA.

1891	324,772
1901 (last)	316,174

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

1901 (last)	112,779
1881	90,722

QUEBEC.

1901 (last)	1,365,829
1891	969,312

With the exception of two provinces, Canada as a whole has steadily, year by year, increased her store of cattle.

AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

1895	2,150,057
1902	1,741,226
1903	1,880,578

This State every three years reaches 2,000,000 head, and in subsequent two years loses ground. Drought possibly has something to do with it.

VICTORIA.

1891	1,782,881
1881	1,286,267
1901	1,602,384

Census taken every ten years.

QUEENSLAND.

1895	6,822,401
1903 (last)	2,481,717

This State has reduced her head of cattle steadily since 1895, and appears to be going out as a live-stock producer.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, EXCLUDING NORTHERN TERRITORY.

1891	359,938
1903	213,343
1904	244,610

This State has been declining in head of cattle for some years, falling below 300,000 in 1897.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

1903 (last)	497,617
1887	93,544

This State shows an annual increase since 1887.

TASMANIA.

1904 (last)	185,938
1890	150,004

This State shows a steady annual increase.

NEW ZEALAND.

1904	1,736,850
1898	1,203,024

Here, too, the increase has been year by year.

It can scarcely be maintained that the vast area of Australia, 1,902,447,000 acres; New Zealand, 67,041,000 acres, are cattle-raising countries; yet, excepting Queensland, the total head of cattle has been fairly maintained in spite of the drought, etc.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

1896	2,303,582
1899 (last)	1,077,044

The returns of 1899 do not include Vryburg division of Bechuanaland. Since 1899 war has undoubtedly diminished the head of cattle, but it is anticipated that when enumeration is resumed the figures of 1896 will be approached.

NATAL.

1903 (last)	626,727
1898	278,558

This colony shows a continuous increase since 1898.

RHODESIA.

1905	114,592
1903	94,544

A new colony with great promise.

TRANSVAAL.

1903	200,000
1902	50,000

These are official estimates.

URUGUAY.

1900	6,827,428
1894	5,205,272
1901	6,326,601

Returns show a fairly continuous advance up to 1900.

ARGENTINA.

1888	21,961,657
1895 (last)	21,701,526

Unfortunately this important cattle-raising state provides no regular or recent statistics, but we may reasonably expect a further decline, because as agriculture increases it is the invariable rule for live stock to make way for the plow.

ALGERIA.

1891	1,233,051
1898	1,004,175
1901	1,035,104

MEXICO.

1902	5,142,457

JAPAN.

1901 (last)	1,282,341
1890	1,044,976

It is doubtful whether Japan, in spite of her 94,499,000 acres, will ever be a serious cattle-raising country. The area of the pasture land is limited, and the prevalence of bamboo grass a constant source of danger to live stock; nor is she likely, in my opinion, for many years yet, to become, outside of her army and navy requirements, a large user of leather.

SIBERIA AND STEPPES.

1903	4,946,800
1900	4,154,450
1904	4,483,585

Latter is an official estimate.

SERVIA.

1900 (last)	942,087
1890	819,251

Increase continuous.

SPAIN.

1891	2,217,659

ROUMANIA.

1900 (last)	2,588,526
1897	2,138,315

Increase erratic.

BULGARIA.

1893	1,767,974

Including 342,193 buffalo.

ITALY.

1890	5,000,000
1875	3,489,125
1882	4,783,232

1890 estimated by authorities.

SWITZERLAND.

1901 (last)	1,340,375
1876	1,035,856

Steady annual increase.

SWEDEN.

1901	2,594,359
1880	2,227,757
1903	2,586,204

Increase fairly steady.

NORWAY.

1875	1,016,617
1900 (last)	950,201

Steady decrease.

HOLLAND.

1903 (last)	1,667,100
1894	1,504,300

Increase annually.

BELGIUM.

1903 (last)	1,720,150
1866	1,242,445

Increase slow, but steady throughout.

INDIAN EMPIRE.

India plays no small part in influencing hide values. The number of bovine animals is so large that I give the totals for the past five years of enumeration returns:

1899	87,069,789
1900	87,737,930
1901	87,288,933
1902	85,295,210
1903	85,135,600

In comparing these figures we must bear in mind that in 1899 Sind was not included, and in 1902 and 1903 the largest province of Bengal was not included. Had it been enumerated I think it would have been found that India shows little or no decline in numbers.

CEYLON.

1901	1,476,747
1902	1,347,827
1904	1,421,533

CONCLUDING SUMMARY.

The foregoing official returns, though not up to date, will furnish us with some indication of the position of the cattle herds of the major portion of the world. It omits such important countries as China, Korea, Manchuria, Malay States, Africa (general), and many South American states. A careful study of the figures will show that the herds have been fairly maintained, if not increased, in many important instances, and that when a country becomes a manufacturing area the tendency is to increase the herds. If that is true, what are the causes for the apparent scarcity? I am inclined to say that the increase in herds has not kept pace with the constantly increasing demand for leather brought about by increase in population, new industries, factories, and wealth.

This increased demand has been met somewhat in the past by the splitting machine, which made a hide or skin go from two to four times as far as formerly, but even that limit has been passed. The introduction of electricity was heralded as the abolitionist of leather belting, yet more belting is being made to-day in leather, textile, and rubber than ever, and electric works have become large users of leather. In boots and shoes we have become extravagant. Our forefathers were not content if a boot did not last a few years; it had to be soled and heeled until the upper was done. Where are the boot repairing shops, the cobbler, to-day? Clogs in Lancashire and Yorkshire are giving place to boots. On the Continent sabots no longer find favor. Increased facilities of locomotion—electric cars, motor cars, palatial steamers, etc., all make for increased consumption of leather, even to alteration in style of footwear.

We have, in my opinion, to recognize that the social and mechanical revolution during the past two decades accounts for a very large share of the increased demand.

The wars in South Africa and Manchuria must have depleted the world's accumulation of leather, and while raging brought grist to the suppliers, but war always leaves evil effects on commerce which time alone can repair.

In conclusion, the foregoing statistics do not in all cases bring us up to date, but looking at the various countries in the light of their history and over the events of the past few years, especially where we have no returns, I think that we may reasonably sum up the situation: "The herds of the world have increased in proportion to demand in a declining ratio."

The tariff of 27½ per cent added to the price of these cattle, no doubt, according to the man from Iowa's idea, in the home market, and the duty of 15 per cent on hides added to the price of these cattle when the hides are sold in the foreign market and must pay 15 per cent duty to get back in the United States. Won't the hide be worth less the duty and freight in the foreign market; and then don't the cattle sell for less here than they would if hides came back here free, we being the largest tanning country in the world, and use them? Or was it because we imported 328,773 head in 1897 and only 15,372 in 1904 that caused these large exports and the difference in price of $21.50 lower in 1904?

In 1898 we tanned 126,243,595 pounds of imported hides, with the duty on. In 1904 we tanned 85,370,168, or a decrease of over 50 per cent of hides that we pay a duty on, which shows that in the tanning business this class of stock has been decreasing because we can't get the raw material free. In 1898 we tanned hides that come in free, or so-called "skins," to the extent of 54,607,534 pounds, and in 1904 103,024,752 pounds, an increase of almost 100 per cent, showing plainly that when we have the raw material free we can compete with the world in producing leather, and if we have free hides will tan sufficient leather to supply the needs of the whole world, employing American capital and American labor.

Export of hides is caused by the use of different grades of hides for different purposes, as, in order to make the different grades of shoes, they must have leather made out of different kinds of hides to produce the shoe at the lowest possible price.

Imports of leather consist mostly of fine kid, manufactured kid shoes, and fancy gloves, and fine English rein and saddle leather, which is mostly used for the fine trade in the large cities, and costs a great deal more than the American goods, and could not be produced in America on account of the difference in tanning and currying. Enameled leather, which we have never been able to make successfully on account of our tanning, Germany and France having the quality of bark that is necessary to make these goods which we can not secure except by going over there and buying it from them.

1892	12,084,781
1891	13,278,847

Exports of leather increased about 90 per cent in the four years from 1893 to 1896, so-called "dull and panic years," and from 1897 to 1905, such prosperous years, only increased about 95 per cent, showing plainly that when hides were on the free list the exports of manufactures of leather increased more rapidly.

Boots and shoes, from 1893 to 1896, increased about 100 per cent, and from 1901 to 1904 increased only about 30 per cent, showing that the percentage of gain was much larger when we had free hides than when we had the duty on.

THREE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-NINE DOLLARS A YEAR IS WHAT ILLINOIS MINERS GET—BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS REPORT SHOWS THIS WAS AVERAGE PAY FOR 1905—199 WERE KILLED AND 535 INJURED AT WORK—WHILE THE OPERATORS CRY "OVERPRODUCTION," THEY ARE OPENING NEW MINES.

[By W. C. Roberts.]

SPRINGFIELD, April 8, 1906.

The bureau of labor statistics demonstrates in glaring figures why the Illinois miners are seeking an advance in wages. The 53,336 employees who work underground in the mines earned an average of only $379 last year. They received an average of only one hundred and seventy-five days' work. They earned an aggregate of $20,214,344.

The value at the mouths of the pits of the coal they mined was $38,689,514. What the operator received for his coal in the different markets to which it was shipped is not given. The figures are taken from reports made by the operators and the amount for which the coal was sold omitted by them.

Another feature of the report that establishes the danger of the miners' employment is that 199 were killed, or 1 to every 186,851 tons of coal mined, and 535 were injured. Children left fatherless number 231. This was before the shot-firers law was enacted. Since the law went into effect there have been fewer violent deaths. The operators do not like the law, because the miners in their new agreement demand that the operators pay the shot firers. The miners claim that it is the duty of the operators to make employment in mines as safe as possible, and therefore they should pay the shot firers, who, the legislature believed, were necessary for that purpose.

WHAT THE REPORT SHOWS.

Advance sheets of the coal report of 1905 have been furnished by Secretary David Ross. The following table gives many interesting facts regarding the miners:

NEW MINES BEING OPENED.

Many new mines are being opened in Illinois, notwithstanding the operators say that too much coal is being mined. At the Indianapolis convention the operators declared they could not pay an advance because of overproduction. Now they are discrediting their own claims by preparing to increase the production when they sign up with the miners after getting rid of the vast quantities of coal they stored in anticipation of a strike.

While the miners lived last year upon an average of $379, they increased this during the months of February and March. They were given all the work they could do. But they received no more per ton. They simply mined more coal. But for the next sixty days they are not likely to have any employment and the average for this year will be as low as that of the last.

Mining is different from almost every other occupation. The miners work out in the country, far from factories and large towns. When not employed in the mines they can not get work at any other calling. They must remain idle. They are therefore slaves to their trade. The operator knows this and he can take advantage of the miner by throwing him out of employment whenever the whim strikes him.

There are several thousand miners in Sangamon County. They are nearly all idle. A number of small mines are working. But the miners who are waiting the pleasure of the operators declare they intend to stand out for the advance in wages. They have no doubt they will get it. Even the operators admit this. But not now.

"Let us sell our coal first," they say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the purposes following, being for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, namely.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

MARY E. DUGGER.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 1975) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Dugger.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

The order was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14591. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River in or near the city of Clarksville, State of Tennessee;

H. R. 14592. An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn.;

H. R. 8158. An act granting an increase of pension to Lemuel P. Storms;

H. R. 8892. An act granting an increase of pension to Malek A. Southworth;

H. R. 13572. An act granting an increase of pension to Saturnino Baca;

H. R. 15691. An act granting an increase of pension to Jerry W. Tallman;

H. R. 5931. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert L. Narron;

H. R. 11046. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen G. Heiner; and

H. R. 10298. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver C. Redic.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 16014. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein," approved June 1, 1900, and all acts amendatory thereof;

H. R. 1895. An act granting a pension to H. Edward Goetz;
H. R. 2034. An act granting a pension to Cora F. Mitchell;
H. R. 3569. An act granting a pension to Ada N. Hubbard;
H. R. 5840. An act granting a pension to Catherine Spier;
H. R. 6094. An act granting a pension to Julia G. Aldrich;
H. R. 6969. An act granting a pension to Ellen C. Lewis;
H. R. 7588. An act granting a pension to Thomas F. Dowling;
H. R. 8191. An act granting a pension to John Hobart;
H. R. 8307. An act granting a pension to William C. Estill;
H. R. 9190. An act granting a pension to Ida Carty;
H. R. 9661. An act granting a pension to Charles R. Hill;
H. R. 9888. An act granting a pension to Abigail Townsend;
H. R. 11076. An act granting a pension to Marion W. Stark;
H. R. 11622. An act granting a pension to Martha A. Remington;
H. R. 11657. An act granting a pension to Madison M. Burnett;
H. R. 12182. An act granting a pension to Sallie W. Mason;
H. R. 12651. An act granting a pension to Louis Grossman;
H. R. 13526. An act granting a pension to Levi N. Lunsford;
H. R. 14472. An act granting a pension to Thomas Cheek;

E. G. RATHBONE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Ohio, praying for an investigation of the official conduct of E. G. Rathbone while acting as director-general of posts in the island of Cuba. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 29.

Joint resolution requesting an investigation of the official conduct of E. G. Rathbone.

Whereas E. G. Rathbone, a citizen of Ohio, and a former member of the senate in the sixty-eighth general assembly of Ohio, having served therein with distinguished ability and with honor to himself, his constituency, and the State, has presented to the Congress of the United States a petition and prayer for relief (a copy of which petition and prayer, duly authenticated by the Chief Clerk of the United States Senate, is presented herewith); and

Whereas in view of the claims set forth in said petition to the Congress of the United States by said Rathbone, and because we believe it to be the duty of the United States Government under our Constitution and laws to vouchsafe to every citizen, whether at home or abroad, the fullest protection of law, and further believing that under the peculiar conditions, legal and otherwise, existing in the island of Cuba during the period complained of in said Rathbone's petition he was necessarily deprived of his legal right in the premises: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, respectfully requested to grant to the said E. G. Rathbone the relief prayed for in his said petition by ordering an investigation of the official conduct of said Rathbone while acting as director-general of posts in the island of Cuba; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

C. A. THOMPSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JAMES M. WILLIAMS,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Adopted April 2, 1906.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, OHIO,
Office of the Secretary of State:

I, Lewis C. Laylin, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is an exemplified copy, carefully compared by me with the original rolls now on file in this office, and in my official custody as secretary of state, as required by the laws of the State of Ohio, of a joint resolution adopted by the general assembly of the State of Ohio on the 2d day of April, A. D. 1906.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal, at Columbus, the 6th day of April, A. D. 1906.

[SEAL.] LEWIS C. LAYLIN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution and petition be printed in the RECORD and also be printed as a Senate document, and referred to the Committee on Cuban Relations.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not know now who is chairman of that committee; I have forgotten. I am a member of it, however. I think we had better send the matter to some other committee for the reason that the Senate instructed that committee by a vote two years ago to investigate the affairs that occurred in that island, both military and civil. That committee failed to perform the duty. Three or four Departments of the Government were instructed by the Senate to furnish the committee with all the testimony they could collect, and to furnish it not in bulk, but sheet by sheet as it could be obtained. The Departments declined to do this. The Assistant Secretary of War at that time, who was Acting Secretary, informed me that he intended to present it in bulk, as in his opinion that was the best way to do it. I informed him that he was not authorized to do anything of the kind; that the Senate only required him to act; that the Senate was the brain and he was the hand. There was never any meeting, but a perfunctory one of that committee, which met to adjourn after a short examination of the documents submitted by Colonel Rathbone.

The committee totally failed to perform what seemed to the people of the United States and to the Senate, a very important duty in making an investigation that involved not only the petitioner, but a great many others who were resting under grave charges. I do not see why the matter should be referred to it now. I think if the Senator really wants the investigation made he had better have a special committee to act. A special committee perhaps, might see its way clear to do its duty. The other committee, however, and I speak with deference of all of them, declined to do anything whatever, and the case went by default.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I still think the better disposition of the resolution will be its reference to the proper committee. If later the committee fails to act, or feels it can not under the resolution and with the powers given it, the Senate can give it additional powers, or if it shall then seem better to have a special committee appointed the Senate can act in accordance with that suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks that the resolution and the accompanying petition be printed in the RECORD, and also printed as a document, and that they be referred to the Committee on Cuban Relations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioner, a citizen of the United States, respectfully represents that upon ex parte affidavits of persons whom your petitioner and his counsel were denied an opportunity to confront or cross-examine, and which affidavits petitioner and his counsel were denied an opportunity to rebut and disprove, and upon the unsworn statements of a self-confessed criminal, made by such criminal under promise of immunity and reward, and in violation of the constitutional rights, privileges, laws, and rules guaranteed to citizens of the United States under such circumstances, and in disregard of the acts of Congress in such cases specially provided, your petitioner has been unlawfully and unjustly condemned and fined and disgraced for matters and things of which he was and is wholly innocent, and is now barred from relief by appeal to the court properly having appellate juridiction in said matter, for the reason that the Cuban Congress soon after said trial passed an act of general amnesty, which act quashed said proceedings and left said court without power to proceed with your petitioner's appeal, and he is now without remedy, except at the hands of Congress, to vindicate his character and to relieve himself and family from the unjust and unlawful aspersions cast upon his good name, and prays full investigation by a duly qualified committee.

Your petitioner further states that late in the year 1898, as an appointee of the Post-Office Department of the United States, he went to Cuba in the capacity of director-general of posts of Cuba; that while acting in that capacity and while that country was governed by the United States through its military governor your petitioner was accused of complicity in certain fraudulent acts committed by persons employed in the department under petitioner's supervision, and upon an order of the military governor was arrested and tried for such alleged offense before "a special court" by special proceedings, directed and controlled by the officer by whose orders such court was established, and who, in violation of law and established rules of procedure and every consideration of fairness, issued orders, instructions, and various communications to the court by which your petitioner was tried from time to time during the progress of the trial.

Your petitioner submits that whenever the United States assigns one of its citizens to public service in a foreign land, and in the performance of his official duties in such foreign service he is accused of misdemeanors, it is the duty of the Government to see that such official has a fair and impartial trial under the usual and regular rules of judicial procedure.

Your petitioner gives the following as the principal reasons for this application:

First. The proceedings which led to his conviction for the alleged wrongdoing were not judicial proceedings.

Second. Ex parte "depositions" were admitted at the trial which were taken in the United States on behalf of the prosecution, the taking of which was without notice to your petitioner or his counsel, and neither petitioner nor counsel were present or had an opportunity to be present to cross-examine the witnesses.

Third. That upon said trial your petitioner was upon trial for a criminal offense, and contrary to all law and constitutional guarantees evidence by depositions was permitted to be introduced, thereby depriving petitioner of his right "to be confronted with the witnesses against him."

Fourth. That the introduction of such ex parte depositions was a surprise and unlawful advantage taken by the prosecution, and your petitioner had a right to believe and rely upon the act of Congress dated June 6, 1900, by which the use of such ex parte depositions was expressly prohibited.

Fifth. That the petitioner's attorneys were not given a reasonable opportunity to prepare for trial, and because of the introduction of such depositions were not prepared to disprove the statements therein contained.

Sixth. Evidence material and vital to his defense was withheld, and petitioner was unable to procure same.

Seventh. The principal witness, and practically the sole witness of the prosecution, was not sworn upon the trial. Said witness testified as a defendant, and his testimony was not given under oath for the reason that under the laws of Cuba a defendant in a criminal trial is not sworn or put under the sanction of an oath. He can not be punished for perjury. Said witness took advantage of said rule and testified as a defendant to escape liability for perjury if he gave false testimony and took advantage of his position as a witness for the prosecution to secure a pardon.

Wherefore your petitioner prays Congress to make a thorough and exhaustive investigation of all his acts in Cuba in connection with the office to which he was assigned under the authority of the United States Government, the methods employed to secure his conviction, to the end that the truth may be ascertained and justice done and that your petitioner may be relieved from the unjust aspersions cast upon his character.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

E. G. RATHBONE.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Niagara Falls, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to restrict the taking of water from the Niagara River for power and other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a bill has been introduced into the Congress of the United States restricting the taking of water from the Niagara River for power and other purposes, which bill is generally known as the "Burton bill," and is now being considered before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, and such bill is exceedingly drastic in its features, and not only very much restricts the operations of companies already producing power, but destroys the chartered rights and privileges of companies which are preparing to develop power, regardless of whether or not the operations of such companies will affect the flow of water over the cataracts of Niagara; and

Whereas said act, if passed and made a law, will materially affect all interests, not only in this city and its immediate surroundings, but will affect all interests of this country within a radius of several hundreds of miles around Niagara Falls for all time to the extent of many millions of dollars a year: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the directors of the Board of Trade of Niagara Falls, N. Y., at a meeting duly called in said city April 16, 1906, do hereby express our regret that so many sensational and misleading statements should have been prepared and printed in the public press relative to the effect on Niagara Falls from the operation of present chartered power companies here, and we not only feel, but know that the public in general has been misinformed and greatly misled by articles written for magazines and the press and public by persons who had no real knowledge of the situation or conditions appertaining here.

Be it further resolved, That this body recognizes that the preservation of the beauty of the cataracts is more for the advantage of this city and the individual advantages of the members composing this board of trade than it is for any other particular community or set of men, and for that reason we would be unwilling to have this natural wonder destroyed for the commercial advantages of other communities to our own detriment; but living in this place and knowing the actual conditions existing here we feel that we are able to say from actual observation and practical knowledge, instead of finely drawn theories spun in the library or sanctum of a magazine or newspaper writer who has gazed upon the falls for a few hours in his lifetime, that the companies now operating or authorized to manufacture power in the State of New York will not injure the cataracts nor deprive the world of the scenic benefits of this great wonder.

Be it further resolved, That we feel that the so-called "Burton bill," in its present form, should not become a law, for the reason that it does not take into consideration the actual conditions existing here and is evidently based upon a very superficial knowledge of actual conditions; that it would work a great injustice to present chartered companies by depriving them without any remedy of the fruits of a great outlay of capital and labor and will be a serious blow to every community within a radius of several hundreds of miles of this place, affecting not only capital but trades people, mechanics, laborers, and all classes.

Be it further resolved, That since the effects of this bill are so serious and far-reaching we feel that Congress should not act hastily and only upon a thorough investigation of the conditions existing here, made through a duly appointed committee, and that such investigation should be thorough, for the reason that the contemplated action of Congress is perhaps farther reaching in its industrial results throughout a large extent of territory than any other bill which has been presented to Congress for many years.

Be it further resolved, That we believe in a proper restriction of the use of water from the Niagara River and a proper preservation of the beauty and grandeur of the cataracts, but we also feel that the State of New York, which has expended millions of dollars for the State park and reservation here, is the best judge as to the necessity of action against existing companies chartered by said State and as to how drastic such restricting measures should be and to what extent they should go, and it is the sense of this body that the interests of the citizens of this locality, including all classes, from large manufacturers to the working men, should not be sacrificed to the senseless clamor raised by the notoriety-seeking authors, but that a dignified and considerate course should be pursued and a thorough investigation made by Congress through an investigating committee to the end that if Congress should find that there is no danger to the falls existing, that reasonable and equitable restrictions may be placed upon present companies, future grants properly restricted, and that the rights of companies and individuals which do not affect the cataracts be not destroyed without reason or remedy.

Be it further resolved, That copies of this resolution certified by the president and secretary of this board of trade be forwarded to the Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, to the Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Representative from this Congressional district, and to the Hon. THOMAS C. PLATT and the Hon. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, Senators representing this State.

We, the undersigned, president and secretary of the Board of Trade of the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y., do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the resolution passed at a meeting of the directors of said Board of Trade of Niagara Falls, N. Y., duly called and held in said city April 16, 1906. Dated April 17, 1906.

GEO. W. KNOX,
President of Niagara Falls Board of Trade.
EDWARD T. WILLIAMS,
Secretary of Niagara Falls Board of Trade.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of Niagara, City of Niagara Falls, ss:

On this 17th day of April, 1906, before me, the subscriber, personally came George W. Knox and Edward T. Williams, to me personally known to be the persons described in and who severally executed the foregoing instrument, and they each, severally, duly acknowledged to me that they executed the same as therein set forth.

H. A. CONSTANTINE, Notary Public.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of Nancy Hanks Council, No. 58, Daughters of Liberty, of New York City, N. Y., and a petition of Loyal Council, No. 75, Daughters of Liberty, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of the Woman's Literary Club, of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for an investigation into the industrial conditions of the women of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BURNHAM (for Mr. GAMBLE) presented the petition of John Lakings and sundry other citizens of Hurley, S. Dak., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of the Teachers' Association of Passaic City, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish national forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 22, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Camden, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "employers' liability bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of George Morris, superintendent of the public schools of Bloomfield, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Samuel B. Steele, of Pompton, N. J., and a petition of Washington Camp, No. 62, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Woodbury, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of Olive Branch Grange, No. 142, Patrons of Husbandry, of Matawan, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the free distribution of seeds; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the League of Improvement Societies of the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of the League of Improvement Societies of the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to establish national forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BERRY submitted sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 5686) for the relief of Ellis Bigfeather; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOPKINS presented the memorial of the Ayer & Lord Tie Company, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a laboratory for the purpose of testing the strength of timber and experiment in the different methods of preservation of timber; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LONG presented the memorial of J. W. Farmer and 23 other citizens of Coats, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5681) for the relief of John Lewis Young, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15643) to authorize the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane to summon and examine witnesses under oath, and making it a misdemeanor for any such witness to refuse to attend or testify or produce books and papers when summoned, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5561) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia,'" approved February 5, 1901, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 5th instant proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the erection of tablets to mark historical places in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, authorizing the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to recopy, from time to time, such original records in his office as may need to be copied in order to better preserve them, etc., intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 5773) to provide a site and buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4603) making the Public Library of the District of Columbia a designated depository for Government publications, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing; which was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 13) authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2620) to provide that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11490) granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 5774) for the relief of the Snare & Triest Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (for Mr. DEPEW) introduced a bill (S. 5775) granting an increase of pension to Harvey M. Traver; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEE introduced a bill (S. 5776) granting an increase of pension to James H. Vane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5777) for the relief of Lawrence S. Brumidi; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5778) granting a pension to Mathias Reed; and

A bill (S. 5779) granting an increase of pension to Pascal J. Elsworth.

Mr. McCUMBER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5780) granting a pension to Lorenzo E. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALGER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5781) granting an increase of pension to Ezra Prouty; and

A bill (S. 5782) granting an increase of pension to Octave Fariola.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 5783) granting a pension to Florence H. Godfrey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5784) granting an increase of pension to Mahala F. Campbell; and

A bill (S. 5785) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Doughty.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 5786) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Ivey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 5787) for the relief of Lurana Harpole; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 5788) for the relief of the heirs of Caroline Thompson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 5789) to regulate the publication of notices issued under the public land laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5790) granting an increase of pension to Jehial P. Hammond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 5791) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Simpson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 5792) for the relief of the estate of John M. Rook, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5793) for the relief of John L. McClendon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MEDICAL SUPPLIES FOR SUFFERERS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Secretary of War has handed me the draft of a joint resolution relating to affairs in California, accompanied with a telegraphic letter from Fort Mason, Cal., by the commandant of the hospital service there. I ask that the letter and the joint resolution may be read, and I will ask for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will first read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

FORT MASON, CAL., April 19, 1906.

SURGEON-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.:

Medical supply depot was destroyed totally. Nothing saved. Nothing can be purchased here. Will call on the naval authorities for surgical dressings. Will need at once 80,000 yards of gauze, 100 pounds absorbent cotton, and two barrels of alcohol. Every provision is being made for the care of the sick. The division hospital has been erected and the post hospital opened. The difficulty in caring for the sick is in the scarcity of water, which is sufficient for drinking and cooking only.

TORNEY,
Commanding Hospital.

A true copy.

R. M. O'REILLY,
Surgeon-General, U. S. Army.

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE, April 20, 1906.

The joint resolution (S. R. 49) construing the joint resolution approved April 19, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast," was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the appropriation of $1,000,000, made by joint resolution approved the 19th instant, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast," shall be available under the discretion of the Secretary of War to procure medical supplies, in addition to such supplies belonging to the military establishment, and issue the same in like manner as the subsistence and quartermaster's supplies specifically mentioned in the joint resolution aforesaid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF TIMBER ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5327) to provide for the disposal of timber on public lands chiefly valuable for timber, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to increase the number of post-office inspectors at $2,400 each from six to ten, and the number of post-office inspectors at $1,800 each from ten to fifteen, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ANDERSON WALKER.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Senate bill 5440, to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Anderson Walker, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. SCOTT. I submit a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it seems from the reports that all the Federal buildings in San Francisco, excepting the mint, have been destroyed by earthquake and fire; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to submit to the Senate at the earliest possible date a report on the cost of erecting in San Francisco Federal buildings to take the place of those destroyed by earthquake and fire, said buildings to be constructed of steel frames, etc., if deemed advisable, and fitted with all modern appliances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire to object, but when it is before the Senate I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. SCOTT. It is before the Senate now, if there is no objection. However, if the Senator desires, I will ask that it may go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want it to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this matter is one of local interest to our section of the country, as well as of general interest to the country at large. It is our district and circuit court that is held there, and there was a term of court to commence there in a few days. The calendar is set and the parties and attorneys have been notified of the day of the setting of cases. There is going to be great embarrassment growing out of the situation, and it will not be entirely met by the resolution, for the reason that the court will have to be held somewhere else. It will be necessary for us within a very few days to make some provision for the holding of the United States court at some other place than San Francisco. It will be utterly impracticable to hold it there, and I contemplate at a very early day asking the Senate to make provision that the court shall sit at Portland, which is in the same circuit, and is one of the places already fixed by law for holding terms of the court.

Mr. SCOTT. I would be glad to support the Senator's measure when it comes up.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely make the suggestion at this time.

Mr. SCOTT. The resolution will not interfere with that. There is no objection, I understand, by the Senator to the resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from Idaho if the fixing of the term of a court in a case of this kind is not in the discretion of the judges?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, not at all; we fix the place of holding the court here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They can adjourn a term of court from one place to another.

Mr. HEYBURN. They can not meet in San Francisco at the time fixed. It is a smoldering fire. We shall be compelled to afford them some relief by act of Congress, and it should be done speedily.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose it is possible for the judges to meet for a few minutes and adjourn the term of the court to a given day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to suggest that that is not possible. The district in which those buildings are situated is not now even open to approach.

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest that this matter is not germane to the resolution I have offered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to the resolution. I simply desired to make the inquiry for information.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, is this a matter of unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes; unanimous consent was requested for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MALLORY. I suggest that the resolution be passed over until at least one of the Senators from California is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. SCOTT. The matter the Senators were discussing is not germane to the resolution I have offered.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that. I see now that one of the Senators from California is present. The only reason why I asked that the resolution might lie over was to await the appearance of one of the Senators from that State.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask again for the reading of the resolution. I hope Senators will listen to the resolution. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. PERKINS. I can see no objection, Mr. President, to the present consideration of the resolution. I think, however, the author of it is mistaken in the statement that all of the Federal buildings have been destroyed. It is my information that the mint is intact and also the new post-office and court building is intact. It will do no harm, however, to adopt the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the resolution. The question is on agreeing to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 4478. An act to amend section 64 of the bankruptcy act was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EMILIE GRACE REICH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1308) granting an increase of pension to Emilie Grace Reich, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH B. BEAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1248) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Bean, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY E. DUGGER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return to the House of the bill (S. 1975) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Dugger, and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with.

PARK AND CEMETERY LANDS IN BILOXI, MISS.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10152) granting certain lands to the city of Biloxi, in Harrison County, Miss., for park and cemetery purposes. It is a short bill, to which there will be no objection, I think.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WASHINGTON, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1274) authorizing a public building at Washington, N. C. It is a very short bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States postoffice and other Government offices in the city of Washington and State of North Carolina, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches complete, not to exceed the sum of $60,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who will then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the result of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Washington, N. C."

Mr. HALE. If the junior Senator from Wisconsin is not ready to resume his remarks, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

IDAHO STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME.

The bill (S. 577) granting to the State of Idaho 50,000 acres of land to aid in the continuation, enlargement, and maintenance of the Idaho State Soldiers and Sailors' Home was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

WYOMING STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME.

The bill (S. 608) granting to the State of Wyoming 50,000 acres of land to aid in the continuation, enlargement, and maintenance of the Wyoming State Soldiers and Sailors' Home was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill take the same course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 4433) to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled "An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park" was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On March 26 the bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask the Senate to return to the consideration of the bill (S. 4433) to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled "An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park."

There are some slight amendments which should be made to that bill, and I think they will be made with the consent of the Senator having it in charge. I therefore move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the bill was passed has been reconsidered, and the bill is now before the Senate, the question being upon its passage. It is not in the Senate for amendment.

Mr. FRYE. If it is proposed to offer amendments to the bill, the vote by which it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time must also be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make such a motion? That was not the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I make such a motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho now moves that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time be reconsidered. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in section 3, page 2, line 12, after the word "shall," by inserting "be in effect only a chattel mortgage, and shall;" so that, if amended, it will read:

That any mortgage, lien, or incumbrance created under the provisions hereof shall be in effect only a chattel mortgage, and shall be subject to the rights of the Government to compel the enforcement of the terms of the lease or contract of the mortgagor, etc.

This is a bill authorizing the parties constructing the large hotels in the Yellowstone National Park to mortgage their property. It is not at all clear that the bill is not a recogaition of an interest in the ground upon which the buildings are constructed, which would, of course, not be granted by Congress or considered for a moment. If those buildings are mortgaged, the mortgage should have only the effect of a chattel mortgage, not a mortgage of the real estate. That, it seems to me, is an important provision, and it is not one that would be presumed, because Congress has power to deal with the soil and with the right to occupy it, and having that power, there would be no presumption at all against it having granted it. Therefore I move that section 3 be amended, first as I have indicated, and then another amendment will follow in the same section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 12, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert "be in effect only a chattel mortgage, and shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I want to submit, in connection with that matter, a legal suggestion that arises in my mind. I have not had occasion to run down the legislation with reference to the Yellowstone National Park for the purpose of determining as to the jurisdiction of the State courts as distinguished from that of the Federal courts there. If any Senator is advised as to whether or not a chattel mortgage given upon property in the Yellowstone Park should be taken jurisdiction of by the United States courts, I should be very glad of that information. We are liable to indulge in some legislation here that will be very embarrassing, and the amounts involved here are several millions of dollars and also a recognition of private rights that might attach to the soil in the Yellowstone Park. In my judgment, so far as I am advised, a chattel mortgage upon personal property under the laws of Montana would be recorded as other chattel mortgages—that is, in the Yellowstone Park—and, as other chattel mortgages, it would be foreclosed as other chattel mortgages are. If that is true, then this provision in the bill would be nugatory, and it might become very embarrassing. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] may be advised upon the question as to whether or not a chattel mortgage of property within the Yellowstone Park would be within the jurisdiction of the State courts so far as chattel mortgages are concerned.

Mr. LODGE. It is obvious that this bill is going to lead to a great deal of debate. I suggest, therefore, that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

MOVEMENTS OF VESSELS IN VIRGINIA WATERS.

The bill (S. 4774) relating to the movements and anchorage of vessels in Hampton Roads, the harbors of Norfolk and Newport News, and adjacent waters, in the State of Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LORENZO A. BAILEY.

The bill (S. 3139) for the relief of Lorenzo A. Bailey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Lorenzo A. Bailey $6,155.22, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Osage Nation or tribe of Indians, for his retainer fee and his contingent fee in the Watson Stewart case, under his contract with that nation bearing date February 29, 1904, and such further sum as the Court of Claims may hereafter determine to be a fair and reasonable fee to him under the contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] why a definite sum is named in the bill as the fee of this attorney, and then a provision is inserted that the court may allow him a still further sum? I should like to know why that provision is in the bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, there were twenty of these suits. One was tried as a test case and decided in favor of the Indians whom this man represented. There was a retainer of $5,000, and the percentage on the suits decided amounted to enough to make up the balance of $5,000. The matter is left to the determination of the courts in regard to the other suits. One of the suits having been decided, presumably there will be no contest over the others.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that he would get $5,000 or more on each of the twenty suits?

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh, no; he would get not to exceed a thousand dollars, if he got that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; then I presume the bill is all right.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes; entirely so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

VESSELS IN ST. MARYS RIVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4925) to amend the act approved March 6, 1896, relating to the anchorage of vessels in St. Marys River; which were, on page 2, line 2, to strike out "under the direction" and insert "upon the request;" and on page 2, line 11, to strike out "of" and insert "not exceeding."

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN FOREST RESERVES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 4953) for the purpose of acquiring national forest reserves in the Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains, to be known as the Appalachian Forest Reserve and the White Mountain Reserve, respectively.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let that bill be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE, SURGERY, AND DENTISTRY IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 2554) providing for the regulation of the practice of medicine, surgery, and dentistry in the district of Alaska, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over without prejudice, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST AMERICAN SAILING VESSELS.

The bill (S. 30) to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that that bill may be passed over, retaining its place. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice and received no action from the House of Representatives. I do not wish it acted upon in the Senate until the House has had some consideration of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Maine, without prejudice.

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL.

The bill (H. R. 14396) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce, was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BACON. That seems to be a long bill, and before occupying the time of the Senate in further reading it, I should like to inquire what committee has reported the bill to the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. Unanimously.

Mr. NELSON. That bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce, as has been stated, with a unanimous report. The committee has largely amended it, so as to remove all possible objections to it.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I shall not object to the reading of the bill, but I shall certainly want to examine it. There must be some reason for the corporation receiving this franchise at the hands of the Federal Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an interstate corporation.

Mr. BACON. Unless there is some specific reason which makes it important that the company should be incorporated by the National Government, rather than by the State government, I should not be in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I can in a few words explain the reason for it. The object of the bill is to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the Ohio River, somewhere near Pittsburg, with the Great Lakes. The canal is to pass through two States—Ohio and Pennsylvania—and on account of the fact that it is to be an interstate canal, in order to expedite the work and make it successful, it is desired to incorporate under the Federal laws. The corporation is directly limited to the business of building the canal. All other matters which were in the bill as it came from the other House were eliminated.

Mr. BACON. Does the bill give the corporation the right to condemn property?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; but it is all under State laws. They must do all things in acquiring property and in acquiring riparian rights subject to the laws of the several States.

Mr. BACON. I shall not object to the reading of the bill, it having been already partially read; but I certainly want time to examine it before consenting to its passage.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the bill and the report, I think they will remove any objections that may occur to him.

Mr. BACON. Possibly that may be true; but I will state very frankly to the Senator that, unless there is some greater reason disclosed than that which has been stated by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], my objections will not be removed, because the very same reasons which would suggest the propriety of the passage of this bill or the granting of this charter would apply to every enterprise which in any manner embraced interstate commerce, and would apply to every railroad which was sought to be built partly in one State and partly in another.

There may be some other reasons which have not been suggested, but if the suggestions made by the Senator from Minnesota were the sole reasons, I should not favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. They are not the sole reasons, Mr. President; but in view of the fact that the Senator desires an opportunity to further consider the bill, I ask that it may be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to the reading being continued, if the Senator so desires.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Georgia will read the report and the bill.

Mr. BACON. I will examine them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

ALLOTMENT OF INDIAN LANDS IN SEVERALTY.

The bill (H. R. 11946) to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I do not see the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] who reported the bill in the Chamber at this time, and so I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey, without prejudice.

Mr. CLAPP subsequently said: In the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] I should like to have the objection withdrawn to the consideration at this time of House bill 11946. The Senator from South Dakota who has the bill in charge is very anxious to have it passed. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know that I shall object to the bill, but I should like to have some explanation of it before it is passed. The title would indicate that it is a bill of some importance and one which would give rise to debate.

Mr. CLAPP. I can make a very short statement in explanation of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the existing allotment law, when an Indian obtains his allotment he becomes a citizen, which divests the Federal Government of all authority over the Indian, save so far as there may be retained a restriction by the Government upon alienation of the allotment by the allottee. This has led to a most deplorable condition in many of the reservations. The purpose of this bill is to provide that in their future allotments the rights of citizenship shall not attach until the expiration of the trust period and the allottee obtains his patent. It is a bill in which the Department is vitally interested and one that should become a law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being withdrawn, the bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. I understood him to state that this bill provides that Indians shall only become citizens of the United States after the lapse of the time in which they might prove upon their lands. Is that it?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then here is the condition that confronts us: We have in Idaho the Nez Perce Indians, for instance, and the Coeur d'Alenes, who were provided for the other day. Some of those Indians are now in the possession of full citizenship. Would this bill prevent those that are not already within the limits of full citizenship from completing their citizenship?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; it would.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it would bring two classes of Indians on the same reservation?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. At 12 o'clock in the day the Indians who had before noon complied with the law and taken their lands in severalty would have one status as citizens and those who did not happen to get in at that time would be shut off from citizenship under this proposed law. It seems to me that there should be some amendment that would prevent a condition where one portion of a tribe would be citizens of the United States and occupy a position above the other portion of the tribe. That would hardly result in harmony in that tribe. It would create an aristocracy of citizenship.

I am in favor of the general principle of the bill, provided it is amended so as to avoid those embarrassments, and they would be serious embarrassments to the two tribes in the State which I in part represent here, because just now their lands are in process of being allotted.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the condition to which the Senator refers, I think obtains to-day upon every reservation in the United States under the existing law. A portion of a tribe who have had their allotments made under the existing law advance to certain rights of citizenship. Those who have not received their allotments do not reach that point in citizenship. The trouble under the existing condition is that when they get their first allotments, their trust deeds, they become citizens. It is true that under this bill those who have heretofore taken their allotments will have the rights of citizenship, because no law that Congress could pass could to-day divest them of the rights which they have, but the bill will for the future cure the evil that is found on these reservations, where the Indians by merely receiving their allotments pass beyond the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. We can not avoid the condition to which the Senator referred, because under the existing law there are two classes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am anxious to perfect the bill rather than to defeat it. Now comes this provision at the top of page 2:

> Then each and every allottee shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside; and no Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

There is a discrimination in that provision between Indians who live in the Territories and Indians who live in the States, which I doubt if the Senator who prepared this bill intended should exist.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think it exists, because no State could pass such a law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, then, why provide, as is provided in this bill? Of course, a State can not pass such a law after the Indians do become citizens, but why provide that a Territory shall not pass any law denying the Indians within a Territory the equal protection of the law?

Mr. CLAPP. Because we are legislating now for the Territories and not for the States. A State could not take away the rights of citizenship if it wanted to. We are legislating for the Territories, and provide in this bill that no Territory shall do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but we use the words "State or Territory" in defining the laws to which they shall be subject in line 4, on page 2.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; we use the words "State or Territory" in defining the rights that the Indian attains to. The bill provides:

> Every allottee shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal——

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, he already is in a State.

Mr. CLAPP. Not unless he has got his allotment he is not.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill says "every allottee." It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States recently that every allottee has attained to citizenship and has those rights, of course. There was a doubt about this until a recent time, but it has been settled.

Mr. CLAPP. What would the Senator like to suggest in the way of amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have time to look the bill over and make a suggestion.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate with a discussion of this bill this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call the attention of the Senator——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call the attention of the Senator to one matter. We are simply repeating the law as it now stands with reference to the Indians, and what has been the law ever since 1887. This bill does not add to it, but, on the contrary, the exact language of the law of February 8, 1887, has been recopied into this bill; so that it will not affect the question whether it comes in again or whether it does not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over without prejudice.

IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

The bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens in the United States," approved March 3, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. In the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who has that bill in charge, I ask that it may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 4250, in reference to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, with a view of getting a conference upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4250) to further enlarge the powers and authority of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and to impose further duties thereon.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it is hardly necessary to detain the Senate by reading the bill. The Senate passed the bill and sent it to the House. The House has stricken out the Senate bill and inserted a new bill of its own. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask for a conference on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MALLORY, and Mr. BRANDEGEE were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN JUAN, P. R.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I observe the Senator from South Carolina is about to ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. I hope he will be willing to yield to me for a moment so that I may secure present consideration of the bill (S. 5639) to provide for the erection of a public building at San Juan, P. R.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $300,000 for the erection of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, Federal court, custom-house, weather bureau, the branch office of the United States Civil Service Commission, and other Government offices in the city of San Juan, P. R.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISHING IN ALASKAN WATERS.

Mr. FULTON. I move that the bill (S. 267) to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska, together with the amendment of the House of Representatives, which came from the House yesterday and was laid on the table and ordered to be printed, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken nearly three hours and a half, he said:

Mr. President, I shall yield the floor at this time and shall ask the privilege of resuming it again on Monday.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside for the balance of the day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the unfinished business be laid aside for the day. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 49) construing the joint resolution approved April 19, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers by earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast."

MESSAGE OF CONDOLENCE FROM BRAZILIAN SENATE.

Robert J. King to be postmaster at Clarksville, in the county of Red River and State of Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 20, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God, our Heavenly Father, whose ways are past finding out, we thank Thee for the sympathy, for the brotherly love and generosity which prevail throughout our land for the stricken people of the Pacific coast. God grant that these ministrations may be to them a source of comfort, consolation, and encouragement that they may take up the burdens of life anew and go forward even to greater attainments. Spare us, O God, from further calamities, and keep us all close to Thee, and bring us to that larger life in Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized to examine, so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, all the matters referred to in paragraph 42, Rule II, of the House of Representatives, and for that purpose it may send for persons and papers, and is authorized to employ a competent stenographer while conducting said examination, and to sit during the sessions of the House and to report the result of its examination with any recommendation to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I very much regret, Mr. Speaker, to be compelled to object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection, so that I can state the condition of affairs?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to the request, but I am objecting to all requests, and this is one. I object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to state the facts, because I think the gentleman from Mississippi will, when he understands the situation, withdraw his objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object to the statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to state to the House the reasons why I suggest the adoption of this resolution now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman let me state my request? I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD (continuing). To be allowed to state to the House the public reasons why I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard the gentleman from Mississippi and has heard the gentleman from Maine. Neither one can proceed without consent. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

For executive office: For two Commissioners, at $5,000 each; Engineer Commissioner, $924 (to make salary $5,000); secretary, $2,160; two assistant secretaries to Commissioners, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,500 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; clerk, $600; messenger, $600; two messengers, at $480 each; stenographer and typewriter, $720; two drivers, at $600 each; veterinary surgeon for all horses in the departments of the District government, $1,200; inspector of buildings, $2,750; principal assistant inspector of buildings, $1,600; five assistant inspectors of buildings, at $1,200 each; five assistant inspectors of buildings, at $1,000 each; temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors for such time as their services may be necessary, $2,400; two civil engineers or computers, at $1,500 each; draftsman, $1,400; clerk, $1,000; clerk, $900; clerk, who shall be a stenographer and typewriter, $900; messenger, $480; superintendent of construction, $1,200; janitor, $900; steam engineer, $900; three firemen, at $480 each; two elevator operators, at $360 each; three watchmen, at $480 each; one laborer, who shall also act as messenger and substitute elevator operator, $365; two laborers, at $360 each; property clerk, $2,000; deputy property clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,500; seven clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $900 each; three clerks, at $720 each; three clerks, at $600 each; clerk, $480; inspector of fuel, $1,500; assistant inspector of fuel, $1,100; two messengers, at $600 each; driver, $480; inspector (now temporary, at $3 per day), $900; inspector (now temporary, at $2.50 per day), $780; laborer (now temporary, at $2 per day), $600; inspector of plumbing, $2,000; seven assistant inspectors of plumbing, one at $1,200, and six at $1,000 each; draftsman, $1,200; three members of the plumbing board, at $300 each, and hereafter said board shall be composed of one master plumber, one journeyman plumber competent to be licensed as a master plumber, and one employee of the District of Columbia having a knowledge of plumbing, gas fitting, and sanitary work, whose compensation shall be $300 per annum each, payable monthly; in all, $98,079.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is an item in this bill making an appropriation for St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the Insane. In that connection, I want to call attention to some remarks that were made yesterday on that subject. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] took me to task upon my ignorance of methods of procedure by which action was secured from the Committee on Rules. I plead guilty of being entirely ignorant upon that line, but the gentleman from Ohio pleaded ignorance upon his part before he got very much further, and I must say that my friend is suffering considerably from lapses of memory. Now, the gentleman, as I understood him yesterday, claimed that he knew practically nothing of anything that demanded investigation at this asylum, and he rather took me to task for acting upon newspaper reports. I introduced my resolution on the 21st day of February, and on the 26th day of February, five days later, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] introduced a bill seeking to investigate this same asylum. I don't know whether the gentleman acted upon newspaper reports or whether the gentleman had other facts in his possession than the newspaper reports, but on the 26th day of February the gentleman did introduce this bill, and I have it here before me. So the gentleman must have been apprised of the fact that there was something in connection with that hospital that needed investigation, else he would not have called upon this House to solemnly enact a bill providing a means by which it should be investigated. Further than that, I want to call the gentleman's attention, and thus refresh his memory, to the fact that the day that the gentleman asked unanimous consent to bring up his bill for consideration the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] objected, at my request. Later on the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and myself had a conference about this bill. We then discussed it, and I told the gentleman from Ohio one of my objections to his bill was the fact that it permitted the board of visitors to make the investigation, when they, to some extent, were responsible for whatever mismanagement or wrongdoing was taking place there. So the gentleman from Ohio evidently did have notice, and he had simply forgotten it on yesterday. I want to say further that although I am ignorant of the methods of procedure by which an ordinary Member of Congress may reach the inner sanctuary of the Committee on Rules, I did apply to one member of that committee, or a gentleman whom I took to be a member. The gentleman from Missouri, Judge DE ARMOND, I furnished with a copy of this resolution, but when I did I was informed by that gentleman that he was nominally a member [applause on the Democratic side], and that he and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], both supposed to be members of that committee, were really in fact not members, and the only duty that they performed was when the actual Committee on Rules had agreed upon a line of action they were called in and informed of what was intended to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make the point of order, but I simply wish to suggest to the gentleman that he will be as brief as possible, as we want to finish this bill. Of course he is not really in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that is the status of this case; that is the status of this attempted legislation, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in that conference which we had, finally agreed to accept the amendments to his bill which I afterwards prepared, all of which he accepted except the last one, and to that he raised no objection. So the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was conversant with these facts, and the gentleman from Ohio recognized the necessity for an investigation. He recognized and he had information from some source that impressed him with the idea that this institution ought to be investigated by Congress, and the only difference of opinion between him and myself on this subject at all times, or at any time, has been that he desired the board of visitors to investigate the people responsible, in some measure at least, for these wrongdoings, while I insisted that a committee of this House, an impartial and nonpartisan and disinterested committee, should hear these witnesses and determine these facts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that, as the gentleman from Ohio has not acted yet, as the Committee on Rules, of which he is so shining a member, has not acted, it is time to do so now. They have got the facts. They have got them in the shape of sworn affidavits. They have got them in the shape of declarations by prominent citizens, and, in the name of humanity, I call upon them to act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida is a most unfortunate man. He predicates a speech upon a statement of fact that is absolutely wanting in fact. His whole speech now has turned upon his own statement that I said on yesterday that I knew nothing about any complaints about that institution, and I shall get the reporter's notes to put in my speech here now so as to get the exact verbiage of his charge. Mr. Chairman, I state—and I challenge contradiction—that I said no such thing, nor did I say anything that any fair man not disposed to have a personal controversy could have tortured into such a statement.

I shall not be turned aside from proceeding to denounce the character of the statement upon which the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] based his entire speech this morning. I have the language here, the language that he used, and the only language that I complained of. It is:

> Now, the gentleman, as I understood him yesterday, claimed that he knew practically nothing of anything that demanded investigation at the asylum, and he rather took me to task for acting upon newspaper reports.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have before me the speech I made on yesterday, and there is not one word, nor syllable, nor suggestion that by inference can be tortured into such language. On the contrary, I told the House yesterday that I had heard of these charges, and that I had introduced the bill in order to have these charges investigated, and that the bill was amended in this House by the suggestion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], and I further said that the bill had been passed in the House and gone to the Senate, and that I did not know what had become of it. I stated all that on yesterday, and I went very much further and stated that I had heard all these complaints. Now, that is what I said on yesterday.

And now comes the gentleman and produces the bill that I introduced to show that my statement on yesterday was not a true statement. What do you think of that? That sounds well in the public press. Here is the gentleman from Ohio saying he never heard of any charges against this asylum, and yet on a certain day I hold in my hand a bill that he introduced in the House of Representatives. And yet on yesterday I stated to the House that I had introduced this bill, and I went further than that and stated very fully my knowledge, by rumor and by newspaper statements, and all I claimed was that not the public, but the Committee on Rules had had no knowledge. Gentlemen, it is something unusual for me to use language of this character, but when a gentleman undertakes to predicate an attack upon me of unfairness or suppression of information by a statement like that I do not propose to sit silent under it. Here is what I said, in addition to the statement in regard to the introduction of the bill:

> But I had heard as a current rumor, in the air, that some action had been taken by the board of managers, and there was little or nothing in the charges that had been made, and so I dropped following up the bill, etc.

Mr. PRINCE. What page is that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Page 5564 of the RECORD. So, I say, Mr. Chairman, that the foundation stone, the substructure of the gentleman's speech, is simply nothing. Nothing took place; there is no foundation of facts. But now a word further. This morning a careful investigation has been made of the documents furnished, which the gentleman submitted to you on yesterday, and it turns out that they never came to the Committee on Rules by any process recognized by the House. They never were introduced in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think, with all deference to the rules which the House recognize, that it would be hardly fair to permit irrelevant debate to go on under the five-minute rule, but I yield just as much time as I did to the gentleman from Colorado, and after that we must go on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Massachusetts has no time to yield.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, I will not object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, whatever it is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I said I would not object to his having as much additional time as was yielded to the gentleman from Florida, which, I think, was two minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is all I want.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, before this happens by unanimous consent I would like to know whether the gentleman from Florida is to be yielded any time in which to reply?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am replying to him.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, on that basis you would never get through—each man would have to reply to the other.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope I will be allowed to have a few minutes more in reply.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the gentleman from Florida is entitled to a few minutes, because he has been accused of ignorance and everything—the most serious charges against him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor for two minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only want to add that on an investigation this morning I have discovered that there is nothing before the Committee on Rules that can be taken notice of under the rules that have obtained there always, excepting the resolution; and as to the resolution, the gentleman has made no offer or suggestion to the Committee on Rules that he desired to have it taken up and acted on. The anonymous papers left there might have been left by anybody; simply put into the hands of the clerk, who happened to be there alone, and by him kept as custodian; and they had never been seen by the committee, and could not be recognized by the committee to-day as of any value beyond being a persuasive influence toward asking the making of an investigation.

If the gentleman will come with the affidavits, and come with the men interested in this matter, who know something about it, and ask for an investigation, the Committee on Rules will take up the question and act discreetly and wisely and to the satisfaction of the House of Representatives and the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be given an opportunity for a moment or two to reply—say three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the committee for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I stated this morning, in substance, that the gentleman from Ohio substantially claimed—I did not undertake to quote his exact language—that he knew practically nothing of this thing. I want to read his language, and see if I was not justified in that construction. On page 5696 of the RECORD the gentleman from Ohio used this language:

> Mr. Chairman, it is possible the comments that I desire to make upon the highly impassioned speech of the gentleman from Florida may occupy more than ten minutes of time. For myself, as a member of the Committee on Rules, I never heard until the statement was made here to-day that the gentleman from Florida had introduced any resolution in regard to the subject-matter about which he has been speaking.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is what the reporter's notes show that you said.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; I did say it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And if you said that, then I am warranted in the deduction I made. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is much ado about nothing, as far as the gentleman is concerned. He is extremely sensitive upon this line. Immediately after my resolution was introduced he introduced a bill. I want to know where the bill that he introduced came from. I want to know whether he drew it, or who drew it, and at whose suggestion he introduced that bill, arming this board of visitors with this extraordinary power. I do not question his motives; I do not question them at all; and I simply call attention to these facts this morning to show that the genleman's memory, after all these long years of laborious if not very brilliant service to his country, has become subject to peculiar lapses. I call attention to it in order to correct the gentleman. I thought I did him a favor when I called his attention to the fact. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For assessor's office: For assessor, $3,500, and $100 additional as chairman of the excise and personal tax boards; two assistant assessors, at $2,000 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; clerk, arrears division, $1,400; four clerks, at $1,200 each; draftsman, $1,200; four clerks, at $1,000 each; assistant or clerk, $900; clerk in charge of records, $1,000; two clerks, at $900 each; license clerk, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,000; messenger, $600; three assistant assessors, at $3,000 each; clerk to board of assistant assessors, $1,500; messenger and driver, for board of assistant assessors, $600; temporary clerk hire, $500; in all, $43,100.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 5, at the end of line 3, insert: "Provided, That hereafter stocks, bonds, promissory notes, and money shall be assessed for taxation in the District of Columbia, in addition to the tangible personal property specified in section 6 of the District of Columbia appropriation act approved July 1, 1902."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to raise the point of order upon that. It has not been considered by any committee, and I think it is too important a matter to be considered at this time.

Mr. SIMS. Will you not reserve the point of order?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachuetts. Certainly; but I shall feel constrained to make it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment knowing that it is absolutely just. There is no tax levied or collected upon stocks, bonds, mortgages, promissory notes, or money in the District of Columbia, and many millions are owned here. Now, I can not imagine why the gentleman from Massachusetts should think that this ought to be considered by any committee. The House is in Committee of the Whole, and we can consider it. It will not take two minutes to consider it. It is only necessary to call the attention of the House to the injustice of taxing this kind of property in all the States of this Union, as far as I know, and letting it go scot-free here, all the time complaining that we are putting burdens upon the District too grievous to be borne.

I would, if I could, exempt $1,000 in the value of improvements on real estate to the owner in the District of Columbia who occupies it as a home, to encourage home building, to encourage the buying of real estate and using it for homes by the poorer people of the District. I certainly appeal in all seriousness to the gentleman from Massachusetts not to make the point of order. The only tax on personal property we now have is on tangible property, and was put in by the Committee on Appropriations in an amendment, so it is not too much to ask you not to make the point of order.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to introduce a bill and let the District Committee carefully consider this proposition?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to do that, but I do not think the members of that committee need one minute to consider it. We can put it on here and let it go with this appropriation, let it become a law. This is a privileged matter; let it go through, and every man on the floor who is a friend of justice will not stand back as a matter of jealousy because it does not come from his committee. I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I would like to do all the good things that can be done through that committee, but this is just and right and reasonable and it should have immediate and prompt action.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it not a fact that men of large means make their legal residence in Washington for the express purpose of avoiding taxation in some of the States?

Mr. SIMS. I am told that is true, but personally I do not know whether it is true or not. Why should not the same class of property be taxed here that is taxed elsewhere? Why should we, simply for the formality of one particular committee considering this matter over another, pass by this important matter and fail to do anything? I am as jealous of the jurisdiction of my committee as anybody ought to be, but by justice and right we ought to put this measure through now for fear of not being able to pass it in any other form. I am exceedingly anxious that the gentleman from Massachusetts should withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph. I want to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill if there are not eleven clerks in the assessor's office under general law that are carried in some other appropriation bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there not eleven clerks in the assessor's office provided for by law who are carried in another appropriation bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I was not aware of it.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that that is a fact. They are chargeable with a certain duty, and are going to complete their labors this year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It was not brought before this committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention of the committee to the fact that this bill carries, including the eleven clerks who are carried on another bill, eighty-six persons who are charged with the duty of assessing property and collecting the taxes in the District of Columbia. It is shown that there are 11,000 personal-tax payers in the District of Columbia. The hearings do not reveal how many real estate taxpayers there are, but we have the enormous force of eighty-six men charged with the duty of assessing property in 10 miles of territory and collecting the taxes thereon.

If I may be pardoned for a personal illustration, I will use it. The logicians have been debating for a long time whether we reason from the particular to the general or from the general to the particular. I think most people reason from the particular to the general. The woman thinks that what cured her baby will cure everybody else's baby, and that is why the personal illustrations are apt in argument.

In the county in which I live there are 15,000 taxpayers. One man assesses the property of these people every year. He not only takes the personal assessment of 15,000 taxpayers, but he arranges them alphabetically by school districts, of which there are seventy-five. He makes the calculation as to the amount of State taxes, county taxes, school taxes, and special taxes of all kinds, and turns those books over to the county treasurer. The county treasurer collects the taxes of 15,000 taxpayers. He keeps the books, he disburses it, and these two men are allowed $600 each for clerk hire, and each receives a salary of $1,500.

In the assessor's office for the District of Columbia for the assessment of real estate there are forty-one people. For the assessment of personal property, only 11,000 taxpayers, there are seven people. Now, I think, for my part, without crippling the administration of affairs in this District that some of these useless employees ought to be cut off and have more money for the school-teachers and for the improvement of the streets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman not know that the committee has cut out some of the employees, believing them to be unnecessary?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am glad the gentleman from New York asked me that question. I have examined the 950 or 960 pages of testimony in this case with a great deal of interest. I want to congratulate the committee. The subcommittee in this case has shown by the testimony, by the character of the questions they have asked, that they went at it with an honest and sincere purpose to do good work. They have done splendid work, in my judgment, and they are to be commended for the bill that they have brought in. My only complaint is that they have not got deep enough, and that there are other places where they ought to cut. I understand that some and probably all of the members of this subcommittee have gone in person and examined the streets that it was proposed to improve; that they have gone in person and examined the bridges under construction. I think they are to be commended for that sort of zeal and that sort of industry, but I call their attention to the large number of employees in these departments for the collection of taxes, and I trust that that committee, before they bring in a bill in the next session of the Congress, will go down to those offices and find out what these people are doing. I can not conceive how that many men could be employed in doing that work.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say for the information of the gentleman that the members of the committee, or some of them, have some doubt themselves as to whether there are not too many men in these offices, but it was impossible to decide that there were too many because of the lack of information; but the committee is determined to ascertain from personal investigation and examination just what the needs of each department in the District are, and then it proposes to recommend to the House such legislation as will meet the conditions which it finds to exist.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear that. I have absolute confidence in the subcommittee from the work that it has already done. I merely call attention to these facts in the hope that they will go further in their work.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I would be glad to yield if I have the right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has just made a point of order against an amendment which I offered. I want to ask the gentleman if there is not much legislation which he deems wise and good that has been considered by any committee except the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the policy proposed to be introduced as suggested in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and that personally I regret that any point of order was raised against its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what the present salary of the assessor of the District is.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Three thouand five hundred dollars.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. There is no change in that?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; as assessor he gets $3,500. He formerly got $500 as chairman of the excise and personal tax board. We have reduced that amount to $100 in this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collector's office: For collector, $4,000; deputy collector, $1,800; cashier, $1,800; assistant cashier, $1,400; bookkeeper, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; two coupon clerks, at $900 each; clerk and bank messenger, $1,200; messenger, $600; in all, $19,400.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 20, strike out "two" and insert "one."

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, I would like to have the attention of the committee for one minute. That provides for two coupon clerks. There are two coupon clerks provided for to take charge of and pay the coupons on the bonds of the District of Columbia. The indebtedness of the District of Columbia is about $11,000,000. The owners of those bonds at certain periods clip their coupons and send them to the Treasurer's office for payment, and they have actually got two men employed for twelve months in the year to sit and guard and count and look at those coupons. It is absolutely inconceivable to my mind, how there is enough work in connection with those coupons to keep one man busy for thirty days in any year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] for the kind commendation that he gave the committee a few moments ago, and I wish to return the bouquet by telling him that I am extremely glad to find that there is at least one Member in the House who is taking the side of economy and is trying to cut down appropriations. It is a very agreeable and cheerful and unusual incident. As to this particular place, however, I think the gentleman is mistaken in his facts. I do not wonder that, comprehending the duties as he thought they were, he should think it was an extravagant appropriation, but these coupon clerks are so called not because they are employed in the halcyon task of cutting coupons, but when the bills are brought in by the taxpayers these men tear off the coupons on the bills and hand the bill itself along to the other clerk. They are simply designated "coupon" clerks for that reason. That is a part, of course, and only a part, of their duties, but that designates them. They are regular clerks in the office, and we could not discover that in the collector's office there was any unnecessary force employed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then they are not, in fact, coupon clerks, but are something else?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For sinking-fund office, under control of the Treasurer of the United States: For clerk, $1,600; clerk, $900; in all, $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph. I want to make a statement, and if I am wrong the gentleman in charge of the bill or some member of the committee will correct me. There are outstanding against the District of Columbia a current indebtedness of about $11,000,000. The District is required under the law to turn over to the Treasurer of the United States a certain sum of money each year known as the "sinking fund," about $975,000. That is one transaction and one only. The auditor or cashier or Commissioner or somebody connected with the District of Columbia must turn over to the Treasurer of the United States a check or cash amounting to in round numbers nearly a million dollars. Now, that occurs one time every year, and yet if I read this bill correctly they have provided for two clerks to do it, one at $1,600 salary and one at $900 salary.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the gentleman think that instead of striking out these clerks provided for there ought to be a messenger added to carry the check from that office to the Treasurer?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, if the gentleman will go further on in the bill he will find there is a clerk to carry checks to the bank——

Mr. NORRIS. It is like the traveling man's overcoat, it is in there——

Mr. JOHNSON (continuing). And I presume that fellow does that. I will make that motion. I do not want to cripple the service, and I do not know in many of these paragraphs where a man could be wisely cut out; but it does look to me from this thing on its face that we have no business with two men in the office when there is but absolutely one transaction each year, and that is to carry a check up to the Treasury Department, and the money is in the hands of the United States Treasurer.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has understated, as I think he possibly was conscious of himself, the work of this office. Of course it is preposterous to say it simply draws or carries one check. In fact, it does not draw any check at all, I suppose. The duties of these men are the entire control of the sinking-fund debt, which is about $11,000,000. They pay the interest on the bonds that becomes due, purchase bonds to cancel when it is deemed wise, or invest and reinvest in United States bonds. They have the full control of this $11,000,000, buying under the direction, of course, of the Treasurer of the United States, who, however, is given no compensation for this extra duty, and really exercises, we understand, a nominal control over that work—the work of paying the interest and of buying new bonds and of making the transfers. We were told that there is a great deal of complicated financial bookkeeping in connection with this duty. It also appeared—the gentleman's attention perhaps was directed to that point—that these clerks are not at all times kept busy, and that when they are not busy they are detailed to other branches of the District business; but at times they are very busy, and, in fact, we were urged strongly to increase the compensation of the head clerk, because, we were told, his responsibility was so great and the need of equalizing him with other clerks in the departments such that he ought to have his salary raised. Now, that is the explanation that was given to us. It has always been in the bill in this shape, and we did not feel that we could reduce it without running the risk of injuring the department.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand the District, under the law, must pay into the Treasury about half a million dollars a year.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, it is more; it is $975,000.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, a million dollars a year into the sinking fund.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. That is, to meet the debt which the District owes the Government?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, let me ask the chairman, Does the District pay that?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. You are thinking about the 2 per cent. No; that is different. That is the 2 per cent on the temporary debt; this is the bonded debt.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the District pay any part of the 2 per cent?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The District pays the whole of it.

Mr. RUCKER. But does it not borrow money of the Government to pay it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Is not the debt getting bigger every year?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; not every year, but it has grown.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not larger than a year ago?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not larger than it was five years ago?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes; there was none five years ago, but in one or two of the intermediate years there was a reduction.

Mr. RUCKER. So that the District owes the National Government so much money, which it promises to pay and ought to pay in annual payments every year; it borrows from the Government to make that payment, and always borrows more than is paid.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; not always. Two years in the last five they have paid more than they have borrowed.

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks that is good financiering?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No. If the gentleman heard my opening remarks, he will recall that I criticised that. But we have about reached the limit. This bill will make a large reduction, and we see no more such large expenses ahead of us. It is because, of course, we have had these very extraordinary improvements, which have cost $17,000,000—permanent improvements—in the last five years, and we see nothing ahead of the same size and in two——

Mr. RUCKER. I do not mean any criticism against the committee, but I do want to suggest that the committee ought to reach a point where it should quit lending money to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This bill says that. This bill does stop it. We do not state there will not be any further loan of that kind——

Mr. RUCKER. That is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Mr. BURLESON. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] that this bill as it is now drawn, if the amount named in it is not materially increased at the other end of the Capitol, will provide for about $800,000, which can be paid upon the unfunded indebtedness of the District of Columbia without any borrowing.

Mr. RUCKER. My notion about it is that the District of Columbia does not intend to pay back the Government's fund, but every year representatives have been appealing to Congress to cancel the debt and give it to them.

Mr. MADDEN. The District owes the Government $2,240,000 now.

Mr. RUCKER. More than that.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government has advanced it. If this bill becomes a law, $800,000 of that $2,240,000 will be paid and no more borrowed.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentlemen of this committee that my humble judgment is that if this bill is likely to become a law these people would flee before they would pay the debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engineer's office: Record division: For chief clerk, $1,900; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,400; three clerks, at $1,200 each; clerk, $840; two messengers, at $540 each; engineer of highways, $3,000; assistant engineer, $1,600; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; three rodmen, at $780 each; three chainmen, at $650 each; draftsman, $1,200; three inspectors of streets, at $1,200 each; superintendent of streets, $2,000; superintendent of county roads, $1,500, and $500 additional as assistant engineer in Rock Creek Park; superintendent of parking, $1,300; assistant superintendent of parking, $1,000; clerk, $900; inspector of asphalt and cements, $2,400: Provided, That the inspector of asphalt and cements shall not receive or accept compensation of any kind from or perform any work or render any services of a character required of him officially by the District of Columbia to any person, firm, corporation, or municipality other than the District of Columbia; inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $1,000; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $840; messenger, $540; inspector of sewers, $1,200; superintendent of sewers, $3,000; general inspector of sewers, $1,300; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; draftsman, $1,200; leveler, $1,200; three rodmen, at $780 each; three chainmen, at $650 each; clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,000 each; two inspectors of property, at $936 each; permit clerk, $1,500; assistant permit clerk, $900; index clerk and typewriter, $720; clerk, $1,500; two clerks, at $1,350 each; inspector of material, $1,200; two property-yard keepers, at $1,000 each; engineer of bridges, $2,100; two assistant engineers, at $1,800 each; assistant engineer, $1,350; assistant engineer, $1,200; two transitmen, at $1,200 each; transitman, $1,050; three rodmen, at $900 each; three chainmen, at $650 each; draftsman, $1,350; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $1,200; clerk, $600; three messengers, at $540 each; inspector, $1,500; inspector, $1,200; bridge inspector, $1,200; eight foremen, at $1,200 each; three subforemen, at $1,050 each; bridge keeper, $650; three bridge keepers, at $600 each; foreman, Rock Creek Park, $1,200; foreman, $1,050; four foremen, at $900 each; clerk, $750; assistant inspector of asphalts and cements, $1,500; two inspectors, at $1,200 each; inspector, $900; clerk, $750; two skilled laborers, at $600 each; skilled laborer (now employed at $2 per diem), $600; assistant engineer, $2,200; draftsman, $1,350; assistant engineer, $2,100; assistant engineer, $1,800; assistant engineer, $1,500; inspector, $1,500; clerk, $1,200; draftsman, $1,050; three rodmen, at $780 each; three chainmen, at $650 each; two messengers, at $540 each; four foremen, at $1,200 each; six foremen, at $900 each; janitor, $720; principal steam engineer, $1,500; three assistant steam engineers, at $1,050 each; three oilers, at $600 each; six firemen, at $840 each; superintendent of repairs, $1,500; clerk, $1,050; clerk, $620; driver, $540; superintendent of stables, $1,200; blacksmith, $975; two watchmen, at $630 each; two drivers, at $630 each; in all, $178,427.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What is the object of that proviso on page 10, line 14, about the inspector of asphalts and cements, and so forth?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The present law provides that the inspector of asphalts and cements shall not receive or accept compensation for work outside. His national standing as the inspector for the District gives him a certain status throughout the country that produces an artificial value to his opinion. We found he was still giving opinions, but was stating that he was not allowed to receive compensation for it. Inasmuch as it had already been said by law that he should not receive compensation, meaning in that way to stop his doing work of that sort, as he still continued to do the work, we added this clause. We thought it was possible, being here, and with a national standing, that he could be of great value to cement manufacturers or others by lending them his name. We did not think the District inspector ought to do that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What is his salary, please?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is $2,400. A pretty good salary for the work he does.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do you object to his giving a written opinion to people outside?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We thought he ought not to. We thought it was leading a man into the temptation of being in favor of one cement company or another cement company, and that he ought not to be expected to do it. And while we do not mean to intimate that the present incumbent of the office has been unduly influenced, we thought he ought to be entirely free from suspicion and as far as possible from temptation.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Well, our physicians in the leading colleges get their salaries and give opinions to people all over the country, and go and testify in medical cases, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: We provide a laboratory here for this man to do his work in for the District. When he gives an opinion he must utilize the apparatus that we furnish him to do this work.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is not the point I make. I can not see any reasonable objection to his giving an opinion to somebody in Detroit or New York on the value of a certain kind of cement.

Mr. MADDEN. Not a bit on earth if he finds that giving his opinion is worth more than his job; he can quit the job and give opinions to everybody's satisfaction.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That does not follow by any means.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. What weighed in my mind was the fact, which the gentleman will recognize, that there is a temptation for a man in the position he has here, because his opinion will be very valuable to any one company if he will recommend their cement, and that there is a large temptation for the man to be unduly influenced in favor of this or that company. We want him to use his time here in selecting the cements according to their merits.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. As I understand you, the present inspector, who is doing the local work, if he received a letter from anybody else outside the District, he would not be permitted to give his judgment as to the value of the cement.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; we think he ought not to.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to several places in the language of this paragraph which has just been read, where there are several items repeated like "rodmen" and "chainmen," etc., and I would like the gentleman to explain the necessity of making provision for these chainmen and these rodmen.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That was what occurred to my mind when we first took up the consideration of this bill. The language grew up in this way: Until recently a large portion of this force was paid for by the day out of a general contingent fund. It has been the policy of this committee for several years to stop these general appropriations and not to leave to the discretion of the different officers of the District the power to use as many men as they please and at such salaries as they please. We tried first to find what employees were necessary and appropriate for them and then appropriate for them directly and leave less and less power in the officers of the District to employ a contingent fund as they have done from year to year. So new appropriations have been made year by year for new rodmen, etc., as we took them from the general fund and appropriated for them directly, and instead of adding the new rodmen, for instance, to the number of rodmen already carried in the bill the year before we have each year added the new ones we appropriated for at the end of the paragraph. The reason that has been done is that it makes it easy to compare with the preceding year, and to see just how the bill has grown year by year. I will say to the gentleman that while it looks very unscientific, as it is, to see these different names recurring through the paragraph, for the sake of comparison with previous years, I think it better to leave that just as it is.

Mr. NORRIS. Are these chainmen all employed all the time?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. They are all employed all the time.

Mr. NORRIS. In that particular business, as they are named in the item?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Not always as rodmen and chainmen. In the winter they are indoors working out the results of their outdoor work.

Mr. NORRIS. This is work on the streets?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. On the streets and sewers, etc.

Mr. NORRIS. On public work?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special assessment office: For special assessment clerk, $1,700; seven clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $900 each; and one clerk, $750; in all $12,650.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out the last word. I want to find out from the gentleman in charge of this bill what there is to do in this special assessment office that you have to have this large clerical force? Seven clerks, two clerks, one clerk; in all, $12,000. Now, what do they do? What is that special assessment office?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This is special assessment work. You know that the sidewalks, when they are laid down, are paid for half and half by the District and by the owner before whose property they are laid. The owner of the property can go to the special assessment office and say, "I will pay for it immediately," and instead of having to be assessed and collected from some time afterwards he pays the money, and they can use it right over again, and by their being able to use it over and over again they can do a great deal more work in the year.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, there is one assessor. Do you think that one assessor can do all that?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. There are two assistants.

Mr. JOHNSON. This only provides for one.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This is the special assessment office.

Mr. JOHNSON. I just wanted to know if there was work for them.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announcing that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5357. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River above the village of Monticello, Wright County, Minn.; and

S. 5683. An act to provide for the removal of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 49) construing the joint resolution approved April 19, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of the sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations and quartermaster's supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the region devastated by earthquake and fire in the State of California, and making appropriation to relieve the sufferers by said disaster.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 5976, "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," the Clerk be directed to restore to the bill the part proposed to be stricken out in the amendment of the Senate No. 26 and to insert the following: On page 9, line 3, after the word "retaining" the words "tribal educational officers, subject to dismissal by the Secretary of the Interior," and restore to the bill the part proposed to be stricken out in the amendment of the Senate No. 27, and to insert in said amendment the following: On page 11, line 8, after the word "five," the words "and all such taxes levied and collected after the 31st day of December, 1905, shall be refunded."

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4250) to further enlarge the powers and authority of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and to impose further duties thereon, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MALLORY, and Mr. BRANDEGEE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10152. An act granting certain lands to the city of Biloxi, in Harrison County, Miss., for park and cemetery purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of insurance: For superintendent of insurance, $3,000; examiner, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; statistician, $1,400; stenographer, $600; temporary clerk hire, $1,200; in all, $8,700.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out the last word. In the department of insurance here you have force enough to run the department of insurance in the State of New York or in the State of Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. There is more work for an insurance commission here than there is in some of the States.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Great pressure was brought on us to increase the force largely, and we were considered very harsh because we did not, because it was made to appear before us that Washington, for the purpose of insurance, is really the same as a State. It has the same examinations of insurance companies, and to all practical purposes it has the same machinery as a State insurance commissioner's office. Of course, the District is very much smaller, but great insistence was brought to bear upon us that they needed a very largely increased force. I understand the gentleman has read the hearings and he remembers those facts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I just wanted to bring out the fact that an increase in force and an increase in pay is asked for. Everybody comes with that story. Do these people examine the foreign insurance companies as well as the domestic companies?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They do; in other words, just what any State commissioner of insurance does.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor's office: For surveyor, $3,000; assistant surveyor, $1,800; clerk, $1,500; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; computer, $1,200; record clerk, $1,050; inspector, $975; draftsman, $975; clerk, $975; draftsman, $900; rodman, $825; three chainmen, at $700 each; two chainmen, at $650 each; clerk, $675; charwoman, $104; in all, $20,379.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out the last word. I want to know if this surveying force is engaged in doing public work. That is, if it is surveying the streets and work of that kind, or whether it is engaged in platting private property, and if it surveys private property, whether any fees are received for that work?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. They are. This force does the public surveying, and then it does surveying of private property for which it is paid, and the money is turned into the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the income from that source?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Just about enough to cover the expense, about $20,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous, Free Public Library: For purchase of books, $7,500; For binding, $3,000;
For fuel, lighting, fitting up building, and other contingent expenses, $7,000;
In all, $17,500.

On motion of Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the District appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE PACIFIC COAST DISASTER.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution which has just come over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 49) construing the joint resolution approved April 19, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific Coast."

Resolved, etc., That the appropriation of $1,000,000, made by joint resolution approved the 19th instant, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast," shall be available under the discretion of the Secretary of War to procure medical supplies, in addition to such supplies belonging to the military establishment, and issue the same in like manner as the subsistence and quartermaster's supplies specifically mentioned in the joint resolution aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monroe street (Lydecker avenue) from Fourteenth street to Holmead place (avenue), and Thirteenth street, Park road (Whitney avenue) to Otis (Lamar) place, grade and improve, $6,000; in all, $45,800.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order that I may be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor at this time for the purpose of addressing the House on a matter that I deem of great national moment and that is of far-reaching importance to the people of this country. I refer to the bill (H. R. 11642) introduced into this House on the 12th day of January by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], entitled "A bill providing that all contributions hereafter made to political committees engaged in promoting the election of Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States or of Presidential electors at any election at which such electors, Representatives, or Delegates shall be voted for, shall be reported by such committees to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and for other purposes."

This bill was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, and the committee has held several hearings on the bill, but thus far it has not been reported to the House.

Let me say that I have read carefully all of the arguments made to the committee in behalf of this bill, have given the subject much consideration, that I am in favor of legislation of this character; and I indulge the hope that the committee will speedily report this bill, or one along similar lines, so that the House will be able to take action regarding it before we adjourn. I have spoken to several members of the committee in behalf of the bill and asked to have it reported, and I feel very confident that the members of the committee are impressed with the importance and desirability of this measure and are giving the matter their earnest attention. But I can not refrain from expressing to them and to the Members of this House the urgent necessity for speedy action in regard to this publicity bill, so that the House can get the bill in its possession at the earliest possible day and pass it before we adjourn.

Mr. Chairman, in order that the country may know the contents of this bill, I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time, so that it will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks, and in order that it may be read and its provisions become known to those who take an abiding interest in this necessary publicity reform movement.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11642) providing that all contributions hereafter made to political committees engaged in promoting the election of Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States or of Presidential electors at any election at which such Representatives or Delegates shall be voted for shall be reported by such committees to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all contributions, payments, loans, advances, deposits, or promises of money or its equivalent, made or expended by any person, firm, association, or corporation for the purpose of aiding or promoting the election or defeat in two or more of the States or Territories of the United States of candidates for the office of Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States or Presidential elector at any election at which Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States shall be voted for, shall be made only to a chairman, treasurer, or member of a political committee, or to an agent duly authorized in writing by such committee to receive such contributions or promises.

SEC. 2. That the term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall apply to any committee, association, or organization which shall in two or more of the States or Territories of the United States aid or promote the success or defeat of candidates for the offices of Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States or Presidential elector at any election at which Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States shall be voted for, but nothing in this act contained shall apply to or in respect of any committee or organization for the discussion or advancement of political questions or principles without connection with any election.

SEC. 3. That a candidate for election to the office of Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States or Presidential elector at any election at which Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States shall be voted for, and any other person, may, without making an accounting to a political committee as in this act provided, incur and pay in connection with such election his own personal expenses for traveling and for purposes incidental to traveling, for writing, printing, preparing, and circulating any letter, circular, or other publication whereby he may state his position or views upon public or other questions, for stationery and postage, and for telegraph, telephone, and other public service, but all such expenses shall be limited to those which are directly incurred and paid by him.

SEC. 4. That every political committee coming within the provisions of this act shall have a treasurer and shall cause him to keep detailed accounts of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to the committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and of all expenditures, disbursements, and promises of payment or disbursement made by the committee or any member thereof or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf. No person shall act as such treasurer unless and until he shall have filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States a writing in the name and signed by an officer of such committee designating him as such treasurer and stating the period during which he is authorized and consents to act as such treasurer, and no person acting under the authority or in behalf of any such committee shall receive any money or its equivalent, or expend or disburse the same, until the committee shall have chosen a treasurer.

SEC. 5. That every payment required to be accounted for by the provisions of this act shall, unless the total expense payable to any one person is less than $5, be vouched for by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expense, and every voucher, receipt, or account hereby required shall be preserved for fifteen months after the election to which it relates.

SEC. 6. That whoever acting under the authority or in behalf of such political committee, whether as a member thereof or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, advance, deposit, or promise of money, or its equivalent, shall, on demand, and in any event within fourteen days after the receipt of any such contribution, payment, loan, advance, deposit, or promise, give to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, and all vouchers required by this act shall be a part of the accounts and files of such treasurer.

SEC. 7. That the treasurer of every such political committee which, or the officers, agents, or members of which, shall receive, expend, or disburse any money or its equivalent, or incur any liability to pay money in connection with any election at which Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States shall be voted for where the disbursements, payments, and liabilities of such committee shall exceed the aggregate sum of $1,000, shall, within thirty days after such election, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States a sworn statement setting forth all the contributions, receipts, payments, advances, deposits, pledges of money or its equivalent, expenditures, disbursements, and liabilities of the committee and of every officer, member, or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, which statement shall include the amount in each case received, the name of the person, firm, corporation, association, or committee from whom received, the date of its receipt, the amount of every expenditure or disbursement exceeding $10, the name of the person or committee to whom it was paid, and the date thereof, and unless such expenditure or disbursement was made to another political committee required by law to file a statement of its receipts and expenditures, it shall state clearly the purpose of such expenditure or disbursement, also the date and amount of every existing promise or liability both to and from such committee remaining unfulfilled and in force when the statement is made, the name of the person or committee to or from whom the unfulfilled promise or liability exists, and a clear statement of the purpose for which the promise or liability was made or incurred. If the aggregate disbursements and liabilities of a political committee in connection with any such election shall not exceed $1,000, the treasurer of the committee shall, within thirty days after the election, certify that fact under oath to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. That no person, firm, corporation, association, or committee shall, directly or indirectly, whether through another person or in any manner whatsoever, make a payment or promise of payment to any such political committee, or to any person or persons acting under its authority or in its behalf, in any name except his or its own, nor shall such committee or any member thereof, or other person or persons acting in its behalf, knowingly receive a payment or promise of payment, or enter or cause the same to be entered in the accounts or records of such committee in another name than that of the person or persons, firm, corporation, association, or committee by whom it is made.

SEC. 9. That all statements required by this act shall be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and shall be preserved for fifteen months after the election to which they relate and shall be open to public inspection, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States shall provide blank forms suitable for the statements above required.

SEC. 10. That any district court or circuit court of the United States, or any judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, may, by order, which such court or judge is hereby authorized to make, compel any person or committee who fails to file a statement as above required, or who files a statement which does not conform to the foregoing requirements in respect to its truth, sufficiency in detail, or otherwise, or who fails to comply with any other of the requirements or provisions of this act, to file a sufficient statement or to otherwise comply with the provisions of this act, upon the application of the Attorney-General or of a district attorney of the United States or upon the petition of any candidate for the office of Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States or Presidential elector voted for at such election, or any ten persons qualified to vote at such election. Such application or petition shall set forth, upon the information and belief, with the grounds thereof, or upon the personal knowledge of any such applicant or petitioner, any failure or failures, or any act or acts tending to show any failure or failures, to comply with any of the provisions of this act, which may be alleged in such application or petition, and shall be filed within ninety days after any election in respect to which the allegations of such application or petition may relate.

SEC. 11. That proceedings under this act shall be advanced upon the request of either party for speedy hearing and determination, and no proceeding had pursuant to any application or petition under this act shall be discontinued without the consent of the Attorney-General or of a district attorney within the territorial jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom the application or petition shall be made.

SEC. 12. That any district court or circuit court of the United States, or any judge of the district or circuit courts of the United States, may, and if with any such petition there be filed with such court or judge an undertaking in the sum of $1,000, with sureties satisfactory to such court or judge, conditioned to pay all costs and disbursements in such proceedings, not exceeding said sum of $1,000, as to such court or judge may seem proper in the premises, such court or judge must forthwith hold a summary inquest to inquire into such violations of or failures to comply with the provisions of this act as may be alleged in any such petition, or into any other facts and circumstances relative to any such election, and to any contributions or expenditures made in connection therewith, and inquest into which such court or judge may deem necessary to secure compliance with the provisions of this act and the fullest publicity in connection with such contributions and expenditures.

SEC. 13. That any court or judge holding such inquest may issue subpœnas for witnesses, who shall be allowed the same fees, whose attendance may be enforced in the same manner, and who shall be subject to the same penalties as if served with a subpœna in behalf of the United States in a criminal prosecution before such court or judge.

SEC. 14. That the Attorney-General, the district attorney, or some person designated by either, or by such court or judge, shall attend the inquest and examine the witnesses. Such court or judge shall also have power by a subpœna duces tecum to compel the production before him for examination of any books or papers of any kind or of any other thing which he may require in the conduct of such inquiry. Such court or judge shall, in addition to any power which may be conferred by any other of the provisions of this act, have power to cause any person who shall neglect or refuse to appear before him as a witness, having been duly summoned, to be brought before it or him; and any person in attendance as a witness, who shall refuse to be sworn as a witness, or who, being sworn, shall refuse to answer any proper question propounded to him, and any person who, having been duly summoned, shall neglect or refuse to appear before such court or judge, may be adjudged guilty of contempt, and may be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both.

SEC. 15. That no person who is called to testify in any proceeding or inquest held under the provisions of this act shall be liable to criminal prosecution under this act or otherwise for any matters or causes in respect to which he shall be examined, or to which his testimony shall relate, except to prosecution for perjury committed in such testimony, and no testimony so given or produced shall be received against him upon any criminal investigation or proceeding.

SEC. 16. That the court or judge holding such inquest may in the conduct thereof employ a competent stenographer to take down the examination of any witness or witnesses, and to cause the stenographic notes of such examination to be transcribed and furnished, together with his findings, if any such there be, to any proper prosecuting officer having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such inquiry, and such court or judge shall have power to tax double the amount of such costs as may be taxed in equity against any such petitioner or petitioners, if he shall find that the allegations in any such petition are materially untrue, and that such petition was brought from vexatious or malicious motives.

SEC. 17. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the proprietors and publishers of publications issued at regular intervals in respect to the ordinary conduct of their business, and nothing contained in this act shall limit or affect the right of any person to spend money for proper legal expenses in maintaining or contesting the results of any such election.

SEC. 18. That every person making or receiving contributions, payments, loans, advances, deposits, or promises of money or its equivalent, or expending money for the purposes aforesaid contrary to the provisions of this act, or who shall fail to file the statements required by this act, or to account to any treasurer of such political committee as required by this act, or who shall willfully violate any other provision of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any district or circuit court of the United States shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 19. That the district and circuit courts of the United States in any district is which any violation of this act is committed are hereby given jurisdiction over such offenses.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this meritorious publicity bill, relating to the publication of the receipts and expenditures of national political committees, speaks for itself, and, in my opinion, is a most salutary and commendable measure of legislation—a long step in the right direction of political reform—and should be speedily enacted into law. Of course this bill only applies to Presidential and Congressional elections, which are matters strictly within the scope of our legislative authority; but I indulge the hope that the day is not far distant when laws along similar lines, relating to State and municipal elections, will be on the statute books of every State in the Union. In some of the States there is now such a law, and I am glad to inform the Members of this House that a bill along these lines has just passed the assembly of the State of New York, and, I am assured by its friends, will be a law ere the legislature adjourns.

The bill, sir, just read by the Clerk and introduced in this House by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] and simultaneously introduced in the Senate by my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is the joint work and the product of the National Publicity Bill Organization—a body of distinguished and patriotic and sagacious men representing, I think, every State in the Union, of which the Hon. Perry Belmont, of New York, is president, and Hon. Frank K. Foster, of Massachusetts, is secretary.

These liberty-loving citizens have given much time and study to the preparation of this bill, and I am inclined to think the measure is—take it all in all—about as perfect and as complete a piece of essential political reform legislation as was ever introduced in the Congress of the United States. Much of the credit for this reform movement to eliminate political corruption in national and State elections through the medium of publicity regarding the receipts and the expenditures of campaign committees, is justly due to a former distinguished Member of this House—the Hon. Perry Belmont—whose patriotism initiated this important political reform, whose enthusiasm gave it life and energy, and whose zeal and industry in the cause have successfully carried it onward and forward to its present state of accomplishment and realization. All of these men, however, on this national publicity committee, working zealously and unselfishly with Mr. Belmont to accomplish this much-needed reform, are entitled to the commendation of every citizen in our land who desires to see our elections conducted honestly and fairly and squarely in the interest of good government and for the perpetuity of our free institutions.

Mr. Chairman, I shall now ask the indulgence of the House while I read the names of the membership of the national publicity bill organization. They are as follows:

Crammond Kennedy, of Washington.
Hannis Taylor, of Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, all of these distinguished gentlemen whose names I have just read, coming from every part of our land, and representing all political parties and political creeds, are sincerely and earnestly and zealously in favor of this bill for publicity regarding the receipt and the expenditure of national campaign funds and are doing all in their power to get the committee of this House having the matter in charge to favorably report the bill and have it enacted into law before we adjourn. I know of no bill of this character in recent years that has received such overwhelming and disinterested support from all political parties and from every section of the country. It should pass Congress unanimously.

The bill has been indorsed, I believe, by almost every labor organization in the United States, and the Hon. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, the greatest and most powerful labor organization in the country, with its members employed in every industry in the land, speaking before the committee recently in favor of this bill and voicing the sentiments of labor, said as follows, and I am glad to stand on the floor of this House and reiterate the eloquent words of that eminent champion of organized labor. Said Mr. Gompers:

I am not in a mood, and never am, to indulge in denunciations or criticism, but it does come to me sometimes that one of the reasons for the absence of legislation of a liberal or sympathetic or just character, so far as it affects the interest of the wage-earners of America, can be fairly well traced with the growth of the corruption funds and the influences that are in operation during elections and campaigns, is because the workinkmen of America have been more than patient. I am under the impression that the patience of the American workingmen is about exhausted.

The necessity for some law upon the subject is patent to every man who hopes for the maintenance of the institutions under which we live. It is doubtful to my mind if the contribution and expenditure of vast sums of money in the nominations and elections for our public offices can continue to increase without endangering the endurance of our Republic in its purity and in its essence. I want to express for those for whom I have the honor in part to speak that they are very much in earnest for a measure of this character. There ought to be no hesitation about the passage of the proposed law.

This testimony, Mr. Chairman, from Mr. Gompers, speaking for the thousands and thousands of toilers he represents, to my mind means volumes in favor of this legislation, and I can think of no good and valid reason whatever why the committee does not report the bill and give the House an opportunity to pass it and send it to the Senate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read from a statement of Mr. Charles W. Knapp, editor and proprietor of the St. Louis Republic, who said as follows:

The Missouri statute requiring all public officials to make returns showing contributions received and the names of the persons making the contributions has been in effective operation for several years without eliciting any condemnatory criticism. The law has been of salutary benefit here, and I have no doubt that a similar enactment by Congress, which would assure the same sort of publicity all over the country, would be of great benefit in preventing such scandals as the insurance investigation has disclosed.

I also read from the statement of Hon. William E. Chandler, formerly Secretary of the Navy and United States Senator from New Hampshire and now chairman of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, one of our most able and sagacious and eminent citizens, who spoke as follows in favor of this bill:

I appeal—

Said Mr. Chandler—

to the National Congress to pass a national law which will simply do this: That where there exists a national committee, and there will ordinarily be only two of each political party—one the national committee appointed by its Presidential convention and the other the Congressional committee, organized here in Washington to give special attention to the Congressional elections throughout the States—where there are national committees, those persons who contribute to national elections shall contribute only to those committees, and the facts of their contributions shall be made public and the expenditures by the committee shall be made public by having statements of the contributions and expenditures filed with the Clerk of the National House of Representatives. That is all that is asked for from Congress. This bill does not interfere with the States at all. It does not undertake to lay down rules for a State committee.

Let me also, in this connection, read a few lines from the statement of Hon. Perry Belmont, made before the committee. Mr. Belmont said:

I repeat that those who are most familiar with the management of political campaigns are those who are most convinced that before we reach another Presidential election there will be legislation compelling publicity of campaign contributions in one form or another. Even if all campaign contributions, however large in amount, were legitimate, the present system and secret method of collecting campaign funds would still be intolerable. It is not so much a question of the manner in which the money is expended. Secret contributions create a debt upon the part of a national or Congressional committee for the political party itself from which that party can not altogether disengage itself throughout an administration. Our organization includes members of the Congressional committees of both parties.

Those promoting this bill are not inclined to severely criticise anybody or condemn methods hitherto prevailing as intentionally corrupt. There is no discredit necessarily attached to any campaign contribution if it be made public. Secret contributions are always liable to be considered as made from motives which will not bear the light. Some of the members of the organization for which I appear before your committee have been active in political campaigns for many years.

The testimony of these eminent and disinterested citizens is the highest commendation of this salutary measure, and conclusively proves that the bill is as nonpartisan as it is meritorious. It is in the interests of good government, for honest elections, and necessary to-day to curb political evils that are sapping the great fundamental principles of our Government, and rocking the pillars of the Republic to their very foundations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read an editorial on publicity from the New York World of Thursday, April 19 (yesterday). This editorial sums up the whole question in the World's best style, and really leaves little more to be said. I ask the attention of the House while I read it. It is headed "Publicity," and reads as follows:

In the passage of the publicity bill by the assembly another victory has been won by public opinion over the hosts of political iniquity.

Behind every stolen franchise, every discrimination in enforcing the law, every failure to do justice against great offenders, is some obligation previously fastened upon the political organization and its public officials through their acceptance of monetary favors. The evils of the tariff, the discriminations in taxation, the favors shown to great corporations and the men who control them, the exemption of the greatest public criminals from prosecution and punishment, have all followed the receipt of corruption money in the form of campaign contributions.

Such contributions have long ceased to be voluntary offerings for the success of political principles. They have become a tax. Senator TILLMAN'S statement that national banks were taxed in 1896 one-quarter of 1 per cent of their capital and their surplus for the Republican national committee is entirely credible. A similar tax is reported to have been levied in 1892 upon certain corporations by the Democratic national committee. Senator PLATT'S annual levies upon corporations doing business in New York are self-confessed. The charges which Mr. Parker made in 1904 have been more than sustained by subsequent disclosures.

The World was the first newspaper to emphasize the great evils resulting from this practice. Its open letters to Mr. Roosevelt pointed out to him the flagrant facts and urged him to remedy them. The contributions of money made to this campaign were needless. They did not increase his overwhelming majority, but only tended to hamper the freedom of his Administration.

The passage of the Armstrong bills, prohibiting all political contributions by corporations and requiring itemized statements of all their legislative expenditures, is in itself an effective corporation corrupt-practices act. Since the legislature can not properly prohibit campaign contributions from individuals, it is necessary also to pass the publicity bill as the companion to these Armstrong bills.

To make public the sources of all campaign contributions and the occasion of their disbursement would do more to stop corruption in politics than all the penal statutes against bribery on election day. Even Pennsylvania, which has been the most corrupt State in the Union in its political procedure, has felt the awakening of the public conscience, and its legislature has passed an excellent corrupt-practices bill.

The New York legislature should round out its excellent record for the present session by adding the publicity bill to the Armstrong bills, first striking out the committee amendment, which exempts expenditures of less than $200 from publicity. Even with this exemption, the bill is a long step toward that full publicity of all matters of public concern which is the necessary preliminary to the full triumph of public opinion.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with this national publicity bill it is interesting to consider the amounts of money contributed and expended in Presidential campaigns in the past by the campaign committees of the two great parties. Prior to 1860, so far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have given the matter very careful investigation—no national committee in any Presidential contest expended much more than $25,000, except, perhaps, in the campaign of 1832, when Jackson triumphed over the corruption fund and the machinations of the Bank of the United States. But that is now ancient history, and has very little to do with the present-day practices of national committees, and I will not spend further time in discussing it.

However, I want to read to the House from a statement which has been carefully compiled by very competent and experienced men, showing the expenditures of the Republican and Democratic national committees in every Presidential contest from 1860 to 1904. Of course, I do not declare that the statement of expenditures which I am about to read is absolutely accurate, but I do say—and a careful investigation, in my opinion, will substantiate it—that these expenditures are approximately correct. The statement is as follows, which I will now read:

Expenditures by the Republican and Democratic national committees in the Presidential contests from 1860 to 1904.

Year.	Republican candidate.	Democratic candidate.	Expended by Republican national committee.	Expended by Democratic national committee.
1860	Abraham Lincoln	Stephen A. Douglass	$100,000	$50,000
1864	do	Geo. B. McClellan	125,000	50,000
1868	U. S. Grant	Horatio Seymour	150,000	75,000
1872	do	Horace Greeley	250,000	50,000
1876	Rutherford B. Hayes	Samuel J. Tilden	950,000	900,000
1880	James A. Garfield	W. S. Hancock	1,100,000	355,000
1884	James G. Blaine	Grover Cleveland	1,300,000	1,400,000
1888	Benjamin Harrison	do	1,350,000	855,000
1892	do	do	1,850,000	2,350,000
1896	William McKinley	William J. Bryan	16,500,000	675,000
1900	do	do	9,500,000	425,000
1904	Theodore Roosevelt.	Alton B. Parker	3,500,000	1,250,000

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said, perhaps these figures may not be absolutely accurate, and perhaps there is no way now by which they can be substantiated by legal proof, but they have been carefully compiled from the best obtainable sources, and I doubt not they will be extremely interesting to students of political events, who desire to make careful investigation and analysis by way of comparisons of campaign contributions and expenditures in Presidential contests.

These national campaign funds reveal a condition of affairs concerning our recent Presidential elections which should be to every right thinking citizen a good reason for the enactment into law of the bill I am discussing; and this measure especially appeals to those patriotic people of our country who see grave dangers to the Republic in the growing evils incident to these large campaign funds, and who believe that they are contributed in most instances by the criminal trusts and protected industries solely for the purpose of debauching the electorate and defeating the will of the honest people of the country. This is one of the great evils of the day that must be checked and checked at once, and the best way to most effectually stop it, in my opinion, is by opening the windows and letting in the bright sunlight of publicity—by placing on the statute books a law similar in terms to the bill I am asking this House to speedily consider. [Applause.]

No one can seriously doubt that there are a great many honest, sincere, and patriotic people in our country who believe—and I am one of them— that William J. Bryan would have been elected President of the United States in 1896 if it had not been for the tremendous campaign corruption fund collected by the Republican national committee to thwart the will of the people in all the close and debatable States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That memorable campaign has passed into history, but it has not and will not be forgotten by the people, and echoes of it have recently been heard in the astounding and melancholy revelations that were brought out by the insurance investigation in the city of New York.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this Congress will be recreant to its duty and false to the people of this country if it does not take action in regard to this matter before we adjourn. The passage of this publicity bill regarding contributions to national campaign committees will be a great victory for the plain people of the land, and will go as far, in my judgment, as anything that can be devised at the present time by the ingenuity of the human mind to effectually put a stop to political iniquity in Congressional and Presidential campaigns. These great political contributions made to the national committees of both parties by the criminal trusts, and the sordid syndicates, and the gigantic corporations, and the national banks, and the vested interests, and the plutocracy, and last, but not least, the protected industries of the country, are not voluntary contributions, but are levied like taxes, and are generally made with the understanding, express or implied, that the contributors shall be protected against the rights of the people, and shall be secure in robbing the many for the benefit of the few, and shall have meted out to them by the party in power certain special privileges which are repugnant to our free institutions and contrary to the fundamental principles of the Democratic party.

In every national contest of recent years the campaign has been a disgraceful scramble to see which party could raise the most money, not for legitimate expenses, but to carry on a system of political iniquity that will not and can not bear the bright light of publicity. Political corruption dreads the sunlight of publicity and works in secret and in darkness. Pass a publicity law along the lines of this bill and I predict that in future national campaigns there will be no criminations and recriminations such as disgraced the closing days of the last Presidential contest. [Applause.] Napoleon said victory was on the side of the largest battalions and the heaviest guns. There are many thoughtful people in this country who have been saying ever since 1896 that political victory in our Presidential contests is on the side of the campaign committee which can raise the largest boodle fund to corrupt the electorate and debauch the election, and some of the testimony which has recently been elicited in the insurance investigation in the city of New York lends color to the suggestion and apparently substantiates the proposition.

No national committee and no Congressional committee and no State committee and no municipal committee should spend one dollar in any Presidential, Congressional, State, or municipal election beyond the legitimate and lawful and necessary requirements of the campaign; and I believe, and I have no hesitancy in saying, that if the campaign committees having these political contests in charge were compelled to give publicity to every dollar received, and from whom received, and every dollar expended, and for what purpose the money was expended, it would be a great forward movement along the highway of good government to effectually stop, to a very large degree, political corruption, campaign iniquity, and the brazen attempts to subvert the honest electorate of entire communities and great sovereign States. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the House, and shall not trespass on its time further, except to request unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks some data bearing on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE NATIONAL PUBLICITY BILL—ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC, ISSUED BY THE NATIONAL PUBLICITY BILL ORGANIZATION.

WASHINGTON, January 28.

Publicity of election contributions and expenditures and the formation of organizations to promote those purposes in all of the States are urged in an address issued to-night by the National Publicity Bill Organization. The address follows:

NATIONAL PUBLICITY BILL ORGANIZATION,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1906.

For the purpose of eliminating by all appropriate methods the evils resulting from secret contributions and expenditures of large sums of money in elections, a meeting was held in the city of Washington January 17, 1906, an association was formed known as the "National Publicity Bill Organization," and this address was authorized:

"The secret and corrupt use of money in the election of the chief magistrate of a nation, its legislators, and its State and municipal officers is a dangerous menace to the institutions of a free people. The profligate use of money for such purposes enables the consolidated interests, by secret contributions, to dominate political organizations, depriving the many of their political rights to confer them on the few.

"It is confidently asserted that the first and most important measure of relief is the passage of a national law, requiring the disclosure, under oath, of every contribution of money and every promise of money in national campaigns, and, in case of evasion, providing for exposure, detection, and punishment, substantially as set forth in a bill prepared under the auspices of this organization.

"This organization desires to promote the formation of similar organizations in every State of the Union, in order that the proposed national law may be supplemented by State legislation of like character and as nearly uniform as possible. This movement has the support of leading representative men, of the political parties, and of organized labor. It concerns the rights and honor of every citizen, and the approval and active cooperation of all are earnestly invoked to carry this reform to a successful conclusion.

PUBLICITY BILLS IN MANY STATES—REQUESTS FOR COPIES OF THE PUBLICITY BILL INTRODUCED IN CONGRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE M'CALL, OF MASSACHUSETTS, AND SENATOR PATTERSON, OF COLORADO.

Letter from Hon. Perry Belmont to the Young Men's Democratic Club, of Providence, R. I.

At the Washington's Birthday meeting of the Young Men's Democratic Club, held at Providence, R. I., February 22, 1906, the following letter was read from Hon. Perry Belmont:

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1906.

THOS. M. KELLER, Esq.,
Secretary Young Men's Democratic Club, Providence, R. I.

MY DEAR SIR: I am detained in Washington and shall be unable to be present at the meeting of the Young Men's Democratic Campaign Club, which I desired so much to attend. This I greatly regret, but I trust I may be permitted to take this method of addressing its members upon a subject of pressing importance, especially to the State of Rhode Island. While the interests of my native State of New York naturally appeal to me, my association with Rhode Island is such that I could never be indifferent to anything vitally affecting its welfare.

For several years past it has been apparent to the managers of national and State campaigns that some check should be put upon the secret contributions and expenditures to and by national, State, and local campaign committees for the purpose of carrying elections. Revelations in New York of the secret use by corporations and insurance companies of the money belonging to stockholders and policy holders for political purposes, without their knowledge or consent, continue from day to day to afford cumulative proof that publicity is a most effective form of correction and restraint, and have given renewed impetus to the movement commenced last winter in the New York State legislature for remedial legislation. A year ago, in an article upon this subject published in the North American Review, I had occasion to say that individual stockholders or policy holders had already a complete right of action in case of expenditure of any portion of corporate funds for political purposes. But—

"Owing in part to the present difficulties in obtaining necessary information, individual stockholders have rarely been disposed to vindicate their rights. The enforcement of publicity by Federal and State laws will assist in bringing stockholders' (or policy holders') suits."

The results of the Armstrong committee's investigation are sufficient proof of the correctness of this statement.

A meeting of the National Publicity Bill Association was recently held in Washington, at which influential members of both political parties, including Representative GRANGER, of Rhode Island, and officials representing important labor organizations of your State were present. It was then determined to promote the formation of similar associations in every State of the Union, in order that the proposed national law might be supplemented by State legislation of like character and as nearly uniform as possible. It is hoped that such an organization is being successfully formed in Rhode Island.

I have received letters from many States asking for copies of the publicity bill, introduced in Congress by Representative MCCALL, of Massachusetts, and by Senator PATTERSON, of Colorado, and am advised that in New Jersey, Texas, and other States bills of like character will shortly be introduced. In Albany members of the senate and assembly of both parties have assured me I could report to the National Publicity Bill Organization that a publicity law will surely be enacted at the present session of the New York State legislature. Rhode Island, with her brilliant record of patriotism and public service, owes it to her glorious traditions to place herself in line with her neighboring States, Massachusetts and Connecticut, who already have the benefit of this form of legislation. What is called in popular phraseology "standing pat," in regard to lavish and secret contributions of individuals and corporations, who thus obtain control of party machinery, will be a difficult attitude to maintain in view of the movement now gathering strength like a great wave sweeping over the country. The light of publicity will strike the shackles from an emancipated electorate who will successfully demand remedial legislation by your State legislature. Let Democrats of to-day recall the words of Andrew Jackson in his message to Congress during his memorable and triumphant controversy with the bank:

"The bank is thus converted into a vast electioneering engine. And the money which belongs to the stockholders and to the public has been freely applied to efforts to degrade in public estimation those who were supposed to be instrumental in resisting the wishes of this grasping and dangerous institution. The refusal to render an account of the manner in which a part of the money expended has been applied gives just cause for the suspicion that it has been used for purposes which it is not deemed prudent to expose to the eyes of an intelligent people. Those who act justly do not shun the light. The question is distinctly presented whether the people of the United States are to govern through Representatives chosen by their unbiased suffrages, or whether the money and power of a great corporation are to be secretly exerted to influence their judgment and control their decisions. It must now be determined whether the bank shall have its candidate for all offices in the country, from the highest to the lowest, or whether candidates on both sides of political questions shall be brought forward as heretofore."

These words of the great Democratic President are full of suggestions at this moment, especially to Democrats, but also to those Republicans who place the welfare of their State above mere partisan advantage.

Very truly, yours, PERRY BELMONT.

NATIONAL CIVIC FEDERATION—CONFERENCE ON ELECTION LAWS, NEW YORK, MARCH 7 AND 8—LETTER FROM PERRY BELMONT ON THE PROGRESS OF THE NATIONAL PUBLICITY BILL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1906.

JAMES BRONSON REYNOLDS, Esq.,
Chairman Committee on Arrangements,
National Civil Federation, No. 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

MY DEAR SIR: I regret extremely that I am unable to attend the election law conference of the Civic Federation, as I find it necessary to remain in Washington to continue the effort to obtain a hearing from the House committee which has the publicity bill in charge. It had been my intention to comply with your invitation to inform you of the progress of the bill.

The movement had its origin in the last Presidential campaign. The demand upon Mr. Cortelyou and Mr. Taggart for information upon the subject of contributions to the national committees was very insistent toward its close. That demand has been reechoed throughout the country until it has become evident that before another Presidential campaign a law will have been enacted requiring publication of such contributions and expenditures.

The Armstrong investigation itself has been but one of the important incidents growing out of this agitation. Revelations in regard to insurance companies and their contributions to political campaigns, disclosures before Congressional committees of reprehensible pecuniary transactions in regard to the Panama Canal, knowledge of similar sinister influences and considerations in connection with concessions in the Philippines and Santo Domingo, have impressed upon the American people the conviction that what may be termed investments in campaign funds for future benefit are constantly growing larger and more threatening to the honest administration of our domestic and foreign policy.

Last September, during the insurance investigation, when Mr. Taggart had made the announcement that "Neither the Democratic national committee nor any authorized representative ever asked or received from Mr. McCall, the New York Life, or any other insurance company, a single dollar's contribution to the campaign fund"—Mr. McCall himself declared in a public interview that he was in favor of a law prohibiting corporations from contributing and compelling publicity of contribution. He had previously said to me—"Mr. Belmont, if you knew what I was obliged to do, you would feel sorry for me." I have often thought of those words since, and the circumstances of his death invite general attention to the evils of the system of which he is regarded as a victim. Those, however, who are mainly responsible and the beneficiaries of that system, should not escape their responsibility.

The movement for State and national remedial legislation requiring publication of what are now secret political contributions and expenditures has been rapidly increasing in strength and scope. National and State organizations have been formed. Organized labor by resolutions and petition is actively and effectively cooperating. Bills have been introduced in Congress and Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of both parties are earnestly in favor of a national publicity bill.

This movement is nonpartisan and the friends of this measure believe that it will continue nonpartisan. The controlling elements of the House of Representatives are all-powerful in deciding, under the rules, what bill shall be advanced or retarded. So far there has been no disposition to delay this measure and it is to be hoped that there will be none. It can not be supposed, however, that those who have adopted what is known as the "stand-pat" policy would care to assist a movement which would bring about radical changes in the manner of collecting and spending campaign moneys.

If the publicity bill should meet obstructions, its friends are now so numerous and the question is so important to the people of this country that a loud protest would be heard against any indirect methods to bring about its defeat.

Very truly, yours, PERRY BELMONT.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs county roads: For current work of repairs of county roads and suburban streets, $90,000.

Bridges: For construction and repairs of bridges, $14,000.

Highway bridge across Potomac River: For salaries of employees, lighting, power, and miscellaneous supplies, and expenses of every kind necessarily incident to the operation and maintenance of the bridge and approaches, $11,600, and estimates in detail shall be submitted hereunder for the fiscal year 1908, and annually thereafter.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how nearly finished is this highway bridge?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is entirely finished.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the construction of the bridge across Rock Creek on the line of Connecticut avenue extended, $150,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. How nearly completed is this bridge, if you please?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Which one?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The bridge across Rock Creek, the Connecticut Avenue bridge.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is about three-quarters finished. They had a mishap and the foundation settled, which caused an additional expense of about $50,000, or it would have been nearly finished.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Did that pier have to be taken out?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The foundation had to be very much strengthened; possibly the pier was not taken out.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts state again whether or not the highway bridge across the Potomac has been completed?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It has been completed, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That does not include the approaches to the bridge, does it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; the approach on the other side they feel they can not complete until the grade has had time to settle.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I thought that must be true, because they have been asking for some legislation out of the District Committee postponing the use of this bridge.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, that is because of the approaches on the other side. There was such an embankment they said that there must be some time for it to thoroughly settle before they could put in a permanent roadway.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an approach to the Anacostia end of the new Anacostia Bridge and the grading and improving of such approach, and grading and improving the extension of Monroe street from Harrison street to the Eastern Branch of the Potomac or Anacostia River, and for constructing a suitable bridge or viaduct to carry said extension of Monroe street over the tracks of the Alexandria Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and to eliminate grade crossings, all necessary for public protection and safety, in accordance with plans and specifications filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, $54,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph. I want to say—and I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee—that I have no desire whatever to see the paragraph go out. I make the point of order simply out of abundant precaution that I may not be held to have waived the right to make it on the provisions of the bill from line 17, on page 27, down to and including line 18, on page 29.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Suppose unanimous consent is asked to have it all considered as one paragraph? I think it ought to be. It is all part of the same.

Mr. MUDD. I am willing for that.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the treatment of Anacostia Bridge be read as one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts please specify the line?

Mr. MUDD. Down to and including line 18 on page 29.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Beginning on page 26, in line 18, and continuing to page 31, line 3.

Mr. MUDD. All right. If the chairman of the subcommittee wants it arranged in that way, I am willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Would the point of order be waived to everything included in the paragraph?

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no; certainly not; I understand not. I have made a point of order already.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That reserves the point of order against it all.

Mr. MUDD. As I understand this agreement it reserves the point of order so that it can be made separately as to each paragraph of the bridge provision, or upon the whole or both. That is my understanding of the proposed agreement.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Under this arrangement the point of order might be made to the several paragraphs if any one of them was objectionable. If there should be a good paragraph in this group, I understand, of course, it is not subject to the point of order, but under the arrangement that the committee has made, or is about to make, if any one of those paragraphs is subject to the point of order the good paragraph would go with it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am willing that it should be that way. It is all one project and——

Mr. MUDD. Why not have an agreement that each paragraph should stand upon its own merits?

Mr. DOVENER. That agreement we ought to have.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Do I understand the gentleman wants it that way?

Mr. MUDD. Yes; because otherwise, Mr. Chairman, if it be held that the paragraph to which I have already submitted a point of order be new legislation, and I should waive the point of order as to that, it might be held that the point of order to other portions which I want to go out of the bill would be waived, because they are germane to the paragraph already let in by waiver of the point of order that would apply to it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then we had better let it go as it is.

Mr. MUDD. I suggest, then, we let the Clerk read it all without waiving the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, that is all right.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the points of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MUDD. On the whole?

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. MUDD. I have already reserved points of order on the whole of it, all the way through to page 31.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, what is the status?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that unanimous consent has been asked to consider the paragraph as extending from page 26, line 15, down to line 4, on page 31, and that it be considered as one paragraph.

Mr. MUDD. The point of order is reserved on the paragraph in the meantime.

The CHAIRMAN. Down to and including line 3, on page 31.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PEARRE. If the point of order is made and line 3 has been reached on page 31, will it apply to all of the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Would the paragraphs to which there is no objection have to go out with the rest if one of the paragraphs is found subject to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly. It is all considered together.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And are the several paragraphs in that subject to a point of order? Are those points reserved if this agreement be entered into?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the bill stands now, each paragraph is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MUDD. The point of order was originally made and reserved on the first one, but, if considered together, considered as reserved and pending on all, as I understand it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We understand that all points of order are reserved. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked to read as one paragraph from line 15, on page 26, down to line 4, on page 31.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order which I made reserved and pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order can be made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the land necessary, award damages, and assess benefits for the extention of Monroe street, with a width of 60 feet, from Harrison street northward to the Anacostia River and of the south approach to the new Anacostia Bridge, to connect with said extension of Monroe street by a curve passing over the tracks of the Alexandria Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in the manner provided in the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the extension of Rhode Island avenue NE.," approved February 19, 1906.

And the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts with any person or persons, corporation or corporations, including the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, for the construction of the said bridge or viaduct and the approach to the said Anacostia Bridge and the whole or any part of said grading and improvements: Provided, That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall do, and it is hereby required to do, all said work and furnish all materials at its own cost and expense, and to pay all the costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings and the value of the land taken, as determined therein, less the benefits assessed, as hereinbefore provided.

If the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall neglect or refuse to do all or any part of said work as herein directed and required, then the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to do, or cause to be done, the same by contract as aforesaid, with the money hereby appropriated, and the cost of constructing said approaches, grading, and improving, and of said extension, the cost of said bridge or viaduct to carry said extension of Monroe street over said tracks, and all other costs and expenses incident to the work herein authorized, including the costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings and the value of the land taken as determined therein, less said benefits as aforesaid, shall be borne by the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and paid by it into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia, and the same shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the franchises and property of the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and shall be a legal indebtedness of said company in favor of the District of Columbia, jointly for its use and the use of the United States as aforesaid.

And the said railroad company shall, at its sole cost and expense, keep in repair said bridge or viaduct, and if the said railroad company shall fail, neglect, or refuse so to keep the same in repair after notice of the repairs necessary to be made served on it by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the said Commissioners are hereby given power and authority to make the said repairs by contract or in any other manner as now provided, or as may hereafter be provided by law, and assess the costs of said repairs against the property of the said railroad company, and such costs shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the property of said railroad company and shall be a legal indebtedness of said railroad company in favor of the District of Columbia. And the said liens may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by bill in equity brought by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by any other lawful proceeding, against the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

And the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad is hereby required to pay the sum of $32,500 of the cost of the new Anacostia River Bridge, in addition to any sum paid or expended by said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad for approaches, and in addition to any sums required to be expended by said railroad under existing law, and the said sum of $32,500 is hereby declared a lien on the franchises and property of said street railroad company, to be enforced by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by the process hereinbefore mentioned to enforce any liens against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. And the said sum when paid or collected shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

And the Anacostia and Potomac River Railway Company is hereby authorized and directed to construct and operate a double-track street railway, propelled by the underground or conduit electric system, along the said south approach and extension of Monroe street, provided for herein, to intersect with its existing tracks at Monroe and Harrison streets, said line to be completed and equipped by June 30, 1907. And within thirty days thereafter the said Anacostia and Potomac River Railway Company shall remove its rails and restore the paving on the portion of their line hereby directed to be abandoned, to wit, along Harrison or Bridge street lying north of Monroe street and the present Anacostia or Navy-Yard Bridge: Provided, also, That the said Anacostia and Potomac River Railway Company shall, within sixty days of the completion of its new line herein specified, pave that portion of the approaches to the Anacostia Bridge now being constructed and Monroe street extended lying between lines 2 feet exterior to the outer rails, said paving to be of such character as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, on the understanding which has been had by the committee, I take it that the point of order must be made to the whole of the provision just read, from line 18, as I first suggested, on page 26, down to and including line 3 on page 31; but I understood the agreement as submitted or modified by the request of the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. MADDEN. Line 15.

Mr. MUDD. From line 15, then down to and including line 3 on page 31. It is well understood, Mr. Chairman, that when part of a paragraph is subject to a point of order—and this is now being considered as one paragraph—if part of a paragraph is subject to a point of order, the whole paragraph goes out. Now, the portions of this provision which is now being considered as a paragraph that are subject to a point of order, in my judgment, are, probably, all from line 18, page 26, down to and including line 3 on page 31, more particularly so from line 5 on page 27 down to and including line 3 on page 31, and clearly and indisputably so as to all from and including line 17 on page 27 down to and including line 3 on page 31. This last-named portion of the provision is subject to a point of order for two reasons: First, because it is not germane to the title of the bill and not germane to any other portion of the bill. I take it that this is a bill to make appropriation for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia. To make appropriation from what source? From private railroad corporations? Clearly not. It is a bill to make appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States, one-half to be paid by the District of Columbia.

It is by no means, I say, therefore, germane to the title of the bill or the object of the bill. The words "for other purposes" in the title can be referred to as including only such "other purposes" as are germane to the specific character and purposes of the bill as a bill to make appropriations for the District of Columbia. But, in addition to what I have said as to the germaneness of the provision, it is clearly legislation and can not be considered upon a general appropriation bill. I will read just briefly from the first portion of the provision to which I have last referred:

And the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts with any person or persons, corporation or corporations, including the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, for the construction of the said bridge or viaduct and the approach to the said Anacosta Bridge and the whole or any part of said grading and improvements.

I would refer the Chair, in connection with that particular clause, to section 521 of Hines's Parliamentary Precedents, where it will be seen that a provision analogous to this was offered to the naval appropriation bill, and to that portion of it that provided for the construction of ships and increase in the Navy.

Let me read further:

Provided, That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall do, and it is hereby required to do, all said work and furnish all materials at its own cost and expense, and to pay all the costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings and the value of the land taken, as determined therein, less the benefits assessed, as hereinbefore provided.

That is clearly new legislation. It is an imposition of a liability upon a private corporation, which is not provided for directly or indirectly in any provision of existing law. The same point will apply to the provision relating to the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, the first portion of which I will read:

And the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad is hereby required to pay the sum of $32,500 of the cost of the new Anacostia River Bridge, in addition to any sum paid or expended by said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad for approaches—

Now, note this language, Mr. Chairman—and in addition to any sums required to be expended by said railroad under existing law.

In other words, the railroad is required to be at an expenditure, according to the very language of the clause:

In addition to any sums required to be expended under existing law.

So, I take it there can be no question that the portion of the bill referring to the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad is subject to the point of order. In the first place, as in the case of the paragraph as to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, it is not germane to the appropriation bill. It is an amendment that makes a liability on the part of a private corporation, and is clearly subject to the point of order. I would like to say one word as to one of the reasons for making this point of order, in addition to its obnoxiousness to the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserve your point of order. Some other gentleman on the committee may desire to discuss the matter.

Mr. MUDD. All right. I have made the point of order to the whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman to reserve the point of order, because some members of the committee want to speak.

Mr. MUDD. Certainly. Now, this branch of the Baltimore and Ohio, known as the Shepherd branch, was built a few years ago by what is called the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company. It is a very poor little corporation, having but little property rights of value, except some reserved rights that it retained in the Shepherd branch of that railroad when it sold out that property to the Baltimore and Ohio some twenty years ago or more. It is not quite clear to me at this time whether or not those rights are or are not injuriously affected by this legislation. I think, therefore, that legislation of this character would better come through the regular channels, and come in through the regular District Committee. I am by no means clear, furthermore, that it is fair to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to have this character and extent of lien enforced against it in connection with this work in this manner without consideration by the appropriate committee of this House.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I admit the general principle the gentleman has stated, that, under the unanimous consent, if any part of the section just read be subject to a point of order the whole goes out, but I do hope the gentleman, upon consideration, will not press his point of order.

Mr. MUDD. If the gentleman will allow me, if it can be arranged that it shall refer only to this section relating to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad I will certainly agree not to make the point of order, as I do not want to interfere with the construction of the bridge.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I trust the gentleman will not press it, because the situation which confronts the committee is this: When this bridge was appropriated for it was supposed this branch of the Baltimore and Ohio was to be abandoned, and that the grade crossing which exists just the other side of the bridge would consequently disappear. But since the bridge has been begun a new project, a new manufacturing enterprise, has been started over there, and that branch is to be continued as an active railroad. Therefore it is necessary that this grade crossing should some time be eliminated, and everyone would agree, I suppose, that the best time for its elimination is when this bridge is constructed, because the bridge goes almost to this grade crossing. Consequently the committee met this proposition: Shall we make an additional appropriation and build the bridge and then in a short time have to have the bridge raised to get rid of the grade crossing, or shall we provide for the elimination of the grade crossing and the building of the bridge at the same time?

Now, this committee, of course, is not a legislative committee. The committee on which the gentleman sits is the legislative committee; but coming at a juncture like this, when it is an obvious saving of money and saving of public convenience to have the raising of the bridge and the elimination of the crossing going on at once, this committee thought no Member of this House would object to such an obvious saving of money and convenience, and therefore we put in the provision that this grade crossing should now be abolished, although the committee, we admit, has no power over it. But we thought this was so clearly in the interest of the public and of economy that nobody would object, and it went in practically as a request for unanimous consent. Now, we have put there also a provision that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad should pay the expense of the change of this grade crossing. We thought that was a fair proposition. When the bridge was begun it was supposed that was going to be abandoned. It has not been abandoned, and we thought it no more than fair that the expense of removing the grade crossing which the railroad created should be paid by the railroad. Therefore that proposition is in the bill. Then the other proposition about the street railway company paying part of the cost of the bridge; we thought that was so obviously fair that no Member would object to that either, because the bridge had to be built heavier and broader for the reason that the street railway company went across it.

How much the additional expense was it is impossible for anybody to say, but we thought we were very reasonable and conservative toward the railroad company in saying that they should pay 10 per cent of the cost of the bridge as the additional cost which their crossing compelled us to make. I think anybody will admit that, if they were to pay anything, 10 per cent is a very small percentage. Those are the two propositions to which the gentleman makes the point of order. I will admit, Mr. Chairman, that they are obviously subject to the point of order, but it seemed to us that they were both so rational and so clearly for the interest of the District and the Government that no one would raise the obvious point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the city require the street railway company to pay anything for the use of this bridge?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No rental?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Nothing at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts say that the street railway company pays nothing for the use of this bridge?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Nothing.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does it not pay for the maintenance and repair?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It pays for the paving of its own tracks, just as it does in the highways.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does it not pay so much per passenger?

Mr. MADDEN. No; not on this bridge.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The gentleman is evidently thinking of another bridge. It does not pay anything per passenger on this bridge. If it did, the gentleman's contention would be more reasonable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to ask if the Government is required to construct this bridge and keep it in repair for the benefit of the street car company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; I will not say for the benefit of the street railroad company. We are building it for the public benefit as well as for the benefit of the company, and we are simply asking them to pay one-tenth of the cost of construction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why should they not pay it all if they are receiving the benefit of it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The public is also getting the benefit of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why should the United States Government have to pay for a bridge that is for the use of the street railway company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman misapprehends. This bridge is not for the exclusive use of the street railway company; it is a public highway, a driveway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then would half of it be used by the railway company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is a question. More than half its width is occupied by the railroad company. We thought we were conservative in putting their share at 10 per cent. Now, we find that gentlemen on the floor object even to that and make the point of order against it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand it has been stated that 20 per cent would be a fair division between the railway company and the city. If so, why should not the street railway company pay 20 per cent?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We put it at 10 per cent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why not require them to put in the full amount of the benefit they get?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. There is no use discussing that, because gentlemen are objecting even to the 10 per cent.

Mr. MUDD. This has nothing to do with the payment for the bridge across the Anacostia River at all.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MUDD. I do not understand that this provision has any relation to the proportion of the railroad's contribution to the maintenance of the bridge across the Anacostia River.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Not for the maintenance, but the building.

Mr. MUDD. They are required to pay the whole expense of the abutments.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The gentleman is confusing this with another proposition. We are referring now to the street railway company.

Mr. MUDD. I thought you were talking about the paragraphs relating to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; the street railway company.

Now I yield to my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY].

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, we considered this subject quite fully last year, and we reached a conclusion that we thought was fair to all parties. Will the gentleman tell me how much these street railway companies are now required to contribute toward the construction of the bridge and approaches?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Nothing outside of its own roadway.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And the approaches to the bridge?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes; and the approaches. It provides its own roadway to and on the bridge.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does it not construct that portion of the bridge that it uses?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, no. It builds its own conduit, of course, in which its electric wire runs.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It puts in the piers.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; I think not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. About how much will that cost?

Mr. MADDEN. About $35,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I have not looked at this for quite a while, but my recollection was that it would cost about $75,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that it is $63,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Is any part of the bridge, after it is constructed, for the exclusive use of the street railway company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Not for the exclusive use. The street car has the first right on the tracks as it has in the street.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And the tracks are level with the grade of the road, so that wagons can use the bridge where the tracks extend?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And use the part of the bridge constructed by the railway company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. About how does the number of loaded wagons using the bridge compare with the number of street cars?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The president of the railroad told us that he had made an estimate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. His statement was 1,400 wagons to 250 street cars.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts which, in his judgment, is harder on the pavement or surface of the bridge, the loaded wagon or the street car?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This is not the surface of the bridge that we are talking about, it is the main construction of the bridge. I suppose as to the surface of the bridge that the loaded wagon wears out the roadway the quicker.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And there are 1,400 wagons to 250 street cars. The company has to pay $70,000, and the construction of the bridge and approaches is to cost $375,000.

Mr. BURLESON. The street car doesn't pay a cent.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Well, I mean in the construction of the bridge.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken as to the expense. It is to cost $325,000, outside of the street railway construction.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That would make the total cost about $390,000, of which the street car company pays $70,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The roadway they construct is used by the loaded wagons far more than it is used by themselves—five or six times as much—and the people having the loaded wagons are not required to pay anything toward the construction, except what they pay in the general taxes. The most of them who use the bridge with their loaded wagons do not live in the District at all. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts believe that the company under the original law as it stands now is required to pay its fair share of the total cost? I ask the question because I had a part in making the law now in existence, and I spent a good deal of time studying the conditions. It was our judgment that we made a fair arrangement, and I still think so.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I certainly did not intend to reflect on the gentleman, as the gentleman from Minnesota well knows——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I do not understand that it is intended as a reflection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have no doubt the gentleman did give it careful consideration, and I appreciate, as he does, I trust, the approving way we have followed his action in this bill in general. We appreciate the good precedents that were set for us in the last Congress, but in this instance we do not think the street railway is paying its full share.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. PEARRE. Is the gentleman familiar with the act of 1900 and the act of 1903?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am familiar with them.

Mr. PEARRE. I will read them to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not care to have the gentleman read them; I am perfectly familiar with them.

Mr. PEARRE. They represent an agreement, do they not? I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota, who is familiar with the facts, if these acts do not represent an agreement between the District of Columbia, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and the Congress of the United States?

Mr. MADDEN. What about the Anacostia Railroad Company?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I haven't the slightest idea that they represent an agreement for the future. I did not suppose that they did.

Mr. PEARRE. They do represent an agreement. I had charge of the bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I do not know of any agreement with the House of Representatives and the representatives of the road.

Mr. PEARRE. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts know that it is a fact——

Mr. BURLESON. The street railway company never claimed any such thing.

Mr. PEARRE. I am not talking about the street railway company, I am talking about the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company.

Mr. BURLESON. They are on the same basis as the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Maryland mean to say that these acts constitute the agreement under which the District of Columbia and the United States paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company $4,720,000 out of the taxpayers' pockets?

Mr. PEARRE. There was a large expense incurred by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

Mr. MUDD. I would say that if there is any desire to discuss this point of order, I can not prevent it, and do not wish to do it, but if we are going into a discussion of the act relating to the construction of railroad terminals in the District of Columbia and the merits of these propositions in detail, I think I may as well ask a ruling upon the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would reserve it.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. But he has reserved it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word more, then I think I have stated my case. This committee recognizes that this is subject to a point of order, but we believe that it is so important for the District that it should now be settled and this grade crossing eliminated while the bridge is being built; that we hoped that no Member on the floor of the House would raise the point of order. If anybody does raise it, however, we recognize the fact that the point of order is well taken, and the responsibility rests with the person making it.

Mr. MUDD. I do not wish to raise the point of order as to the construction of the bridge, or as to the elimination of the grade crossing; if that can be waived, with the understanding that I would not waive it as to the other provisions that I do object to, I am willing and ready and anxious to do so. I am willing to have an agreement to that effect.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would reserve his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia has insisted on his point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order. I do not wish to discuss the point of order, but I wish to discuss the proposition itself.

Mr. MUDD. Then I insist upon the point of order now and a ruling upon it at this time, if the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. There does not seem to be anybody inclined to question that the point of order is well taken. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had hoped at one time to discuss some of the provisions of this bill, but I have refrained from doing so in order to expedite its passage. I wish to say a few words, however, in justification of the action of the committee in inserting the provisions that have just been taken out on the point of order. A bridge was authorized to Anacostia across the Potomac River and the Commissioners came before the committee and asked for two hundred and odd thousand dollars to continue the work on that bridge. They stated that it would be a great mistake, however, to continue the bridge as originally projected; that if that were done, a dangerous grade crossing would be established and maintained and that a very sharp angle would exist where the bridge met the highway. They suggested, as an improvement, that the original project be changed; that the bridge be constructed along a different line; that a street be extended, and that a dangerous crossing be eliminated, and that the limit of cost of the bridge be increased. The question the committee had to decide was this: Would it appropriate for the bridge as at present authorized and have these very dangerous conditions or would it agree to the change in plan with the consequent increase in cost? I have no doubt that any Member of this House listening to the testimony before the committee would have refused to assent to appropriate for the bridge as at present projected and would have insisted that if any more money was expended, it should be expended upon the changed plans. Having ascertained that fact, it then developed after some investigation, first, that the bridge was being built 5 feet wider, because of its occupation by a street railway; that that had materially added to the cost of the bridge, and that the railway company was not only paying no part of the construction of the bridge but that it would not be subject to any head tax or car tax or toll tax for its use of the bridge.

The committee then decided that if the bridge were to be built upon the changed plan right in the legislation authorizing the change of plan a reasonable charge should be placed upon the street railway company because of its use of the bridge and because of the additional expense to which the Government was put by reason of that use. The committee found that the elimination of the grade crossing would be necessary and would entail additional expense, because a spur of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was to be continued which, when the bridge was originally projected, it had been intended to abandon. So the committee determined that if after the bridge had been projected and after plans had been prepared and some expense had been incurred the railroad changed its mind and continued this spur it should defray the cost of eliminating the grade crossing, which would be dangerous and a menace to the public as a result of the continuation of that spur. The committee believed, and, in my opinion, properly, that no appropriation should be made for the bridge at all at this time unless these two companies were compelled to pay adequately for the advantages that they would derive from the erection of the bridge, and I am glad that the arrangement was made which eliminated from this bill the entire provisions, for I prefer to see the bridge stand there unfinished than to have the Government mulcted for the benefit of these two companies.

In reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY], I wish to say this: I can readily see how the gentleman from Minnesota agreed to the provisions that were incorporated in the bill last year. It was with the utmost difficulty, and only because in the subcommittee there was a gentleman familiar with the construction of railroad bridges and the increased cost incident to their use by railways, that the subcommittee was able to obtain any information whatever as to the increased cost by reason of the use of this bridge by the railroad. The engineers practically said that it was immaterial in constructing this bridge so far as the cost was concerned whether it was used by a railroad company or not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It was the city engineer who made that statement, as I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to extend his remarks for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If the gentleman will pardon me, that is practically the ground upon which we proceeded. We had the technical official opinion of the city engineer that it would not cost more to construct the bridge with the car tracks than without—that the bridge would be built strong enough in any event to carry the car tracks and car service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And yet in the face of that statement of the engineer——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. It was demonstrated beyond question that the bridge had to be built at least 5 feet wider because——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. How could that be when the whole surface will be available for use of wagons, carriages, and so forth? How could that possibly be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may be in error in regard to the width, but the gentleman will understand this, that if the bridge was built for the use of teams only, the roadway would only have to be sufficiently wide to permit teams to pass in crossing, but with the railroad tracks they not only had to have it wide enough to permit the railroad tracks, but wide enough on either side for teams to pass and for cars to pass.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not only that, but the railroad has the right to use the right of way of 20 per cent of the bridge and everything must give way to the railroad; though it may not cost materially more, the railroad has the right of way over one-fifth of the whole surface.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. But, as a matter of fact, my friend knows—he has crossed bridges under these circumstances—that a car goes fast enough for any vehicle to follow it, and cars are on the bridge during only a limited portion of the time. As a matter of fact, the part of the bridge that is occupied by the street railway is the particular part that is most used by other vehicles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is very true, but the courts of the country have decided hundreds of times that the cars of a railway company have superior right of way; the other vehicles must turn aside for the cars.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They cross the bridge on the same side that other vehicles pass on. A car going that way can be followed by a wagon going that way, and a car coming this way can be followed by a vehicle coming this way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and wagons going that way must turn out in order to permit cars to cross.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Wagons would have to "turn out" only in case they are violating "the law of the road." There is a law of the road under which drivers of wagons and other vehicles use the highways. You can not pass down Pennsylvania avenue on either side of the street you choose, even on that part that is set apart for wagons. There is a law of the road that everyone must recognize. This law of the road applies to the cars also.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was stated in addition that the structural strain would be no greater by reason of the use of the railroad company, and yet the committee was unable to believe that it would require no heavier construction for a bridge upon which at least 250 cars were to be operated a day than if those cars were not to pass over the bridge. More than that, there is no tax and none has been imposed upon this company for the use of this bridge, either a head tax or a car tax.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think if the gentleman will read the law as it stands he will find that the railroad company is required to pay one-half of the total cost of maintenance and repair of the entire bridge. That is what we intended to provide, and that is what I think we did provide in the existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I examined the law hurriedly, and do not question the accuracy of the gentleman's statement. It was under these circumstances that this company paid for nothing in connection with the construction of this bridge that it would not have been compelled to pay for it if it were building across or along a street that the committee believed it should pay some fair proportion of the cost of the bridge. Now, it was admitted that its use amounted to 20 per cent and the committee fixed 10 per cent——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this question the committee was called upon to appropriate out of the public funds $225,000 to continue and complete the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River leading to Anacostia. No one seems to have objected that the money, which was to be taken from the public Treasury, was to be used in the construction of a bridge to accommodate the railway companies. But just as soon as any effort whatever is made to relieve the public Treasury by compelling those who use the bridge to pay their just proportion of the cost, then we find opposition to the passage of the bill. No one seems to have complained that under a permanent law eliminating grade crossings the public Treasury would be charged with the expenditure of $4,720,000, all of which was either paid to the Pennsylvania and to the Baltimore and Ohio railroads, or was paid for damage to property caused by the elimination of these grade crossings. If I understand the situation correctly, this particular track of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company——

Mr. MUDD. Will the gentleman allow an interruption? I want to correct the gentleman. The gentleman, in referring to the legislation for the use of railroad terminals in this city, made the statement that no one complained when all this money was paid to the railroads. That is not in accord with the facts as to myself and many others of this House.

Mr. MADDEN. I said that no one was complaining now. I did not say that they did not complain.

Mr. MUDD. That legislation is not pending now.

Mr. MADDEN. No one seems to be complaining now about the money that is taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers to accommodate the railway companies.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman had better confine himself to the facts.

Mr. MADDEN. I am doing so.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman is correct about the amount of money. I want to say that Mr. Cowherd, a former Member of the House, and myself did everything in the world here for two or three days to prevent it, and we got run over completely and mashed up to such an extent that it has been almost painful ever since to even refer to it.

Mr. MUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. The principal track of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, in which the gentleman seems to be so much interested to prevent the collection of $54,000 for the construction of this bridge to Anacostia, is, as I understand it, under the permanent law referred to, a trespasser upon these premises, and it ought to be removed. Why should the taxpayers be obliged to expend $54,000 to accommodate a trespasser, and why should the taxpayers be obliged to spend $32,500 more than they ought to spend to accommodate the Anacostia Street Railway Company? Why, the president of that company came before our committee, Mr. Chairman, and said he recognized the justice of the effort on the part of this committee to make his railway pay a part of the cost of this bridge. And when we asked him what amount he thought his company ought to pay, he said he thought it ought to pay about $12,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. You agreed upon the principle, but differed in the amount?

Mr. MADDEN. In the amount. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one thing more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have been led to believe that neither the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad nor the street railroads pay any taxes here in the District of Columbia. Is that true?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I did not make that statement. If the gentleman asks that question based upon anything I have said, he is mistaken.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They were treated as trespassers and foreigners to any rights here, and I was just wondering if it was true whether they paid any taxes here or not.

Mr. MADDEN. If the city is constructing a bridge, and these people either are in the way or wish to use that bridge, and if because they wish to use the bridge the cost of its construction——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. If because of their use of this bridge the cost of its construction is vastly more than it would be without that use, there is no good reason why the taxpayers should be obliged to pay all of this cost. Now, why are these gentlemen here so solicitous for the interests of the railroad?

The railway company, through its president, came before the committee of which I am a member and said that he recognized the justice of the principle upon which we sought to tax his company for a part of the cost of this bridge, and while we differed on the amount that they should pay we agreed upon the question of principle. If the gentleman who represents the company was willing that his company should be obliged to pay, why should any gentleman on the floor of this House object to his agreement to the payment of something toward the cost of the construction of this bridge?

We will find gentlemen here in a few moments, I presume, when we reach another clause of the bill, objecting to the impositions of burdens upon street-railway companies under the clause which seeks to compel them to sprinkle the car tracks on which they run. They say that the street-car company has expended, or will have expended, a lot of money in the construction of its tracks on this bridge; that it builds its own conduit through which it runs the wire that furnishes the power to operate the cars. Well, if it would not build its own conduit, who would? Would it be expected that the taxpayers of this District and the people of the nation should not only furnish the streets for these car companies, but furnish the bridges and the conduits for the use of the car companies?

Mr. Chairman, I regret more than I have ability to express to learn that any such sentiment prevails as that which has been demonstrated against the collection of the just dues from these railroad companies on account of which the District has been obliged to expend vast sums of money.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the last section.

When this committee had this item under consideration there was absolutely no division between its members upon the proposition that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the street railroad company should pay in part for the construction of this bridge. No intelligent man can gainsay the proposition that an increased expense is imposed upon the taxpayers of the District, and upon the Government, by reason of the fact that the grade crossing must be constructed in the interest of public safety when this bridge is built. That grade crossing, made necessary for the use of the railroad, is what induced the committee to endeavor to arrange so that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad should pay part thereof. No man can gainsay the proposition, and notwithstanding what the gentleman from Minnesota has said, no intelligent man, when he considers the proposition, can question the fact that this bridge must be built stronger and wider by reason of the fact that the street railway is going to occupy it and constantly use it. Consequently your committee reached the conclusion that the street railroad company should pay part of the expense of its construction.

The only question that arose in our minds was, What was the fair, square thing for this railroad company and this street railroad company to do toward paying part of the cost of the bridge's construction? There was a division of opinion upon the proposition as to the amount they should each pay. We discussed the matter at great length. And I want to say that a majority of the subcommittee thought that the sum to be paid by the Baltimore and Ohio should be much greater than the amount carried in this bill. The majority of the subcommittee thought the amount that should be paid by this street railway should be greater than the amount carried in this bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has had great experience in such matters as this, made a careful calculation, and reached the conclusion that the street railway company occupied 20 per cent of this bridge structure; and we were so anxious to do the right thing, we were so fearful if we imposed what even might look like an unnecessary burden upon these companies, what they themselves would not admit was right, that that fact might result in having pressure brought to bear to force somebody upon the floor to raise the point of order; so we put the amount down, put it so low that we thought there would not be a man upon this floor that could keep his face and make the point of order.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. We reduced it to 10 per cent of the cost of the construction of this bridge to be paid by this street railway company. But, as I told you before, by every method of calculation that could be made, it ought to have been 20 per cent of the cost of construction.

Now, gentlemen, I do not propose to impugn the motives of any man upon this floor. I will not do it. Surely there is no representative of the Baltimore and Ohio upon this floor. Surely there is no lackey of the street railway company upon this floor. I know these gentlemen who have made the point of order have been solicitous that we should not violate the rules of this House. I know these gentlemen have been only anxious or solicitous for fear something might be done that is unjust to the railroads.

But, now, gentlemen, when we have shown you, when the able chairman of this committee assures you that we have done only the right thing, when the gentleman from Illinois, who has had years of experience in matters of this kind, tells you we have done the liberal thing toward these railroads, I must believe that as soon as these facts are brought to their attention the gentlemen who have made these points of orders will speedily withdraw them, in order that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, in order that your constituents, who bear the half of these burdens, shall not be unduly burdened in order to favor the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the street railroad company. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to add to my statement of a few moments ago, in justice to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] I spoke of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Cowherd, and myself fighting the appropriation referred to by the gentleman from Illinois. It is a fact, and it ought to be stated in justice to the gentleman from Maryland, that he was on the conference committee, also that the House reduced the amount of the appropriation $1,000,000, and as a member of the conference committee he held out to the last, and kept holding out as long as the House held out.

Mr. MUDD. I held out to the end and voted to the end.

Mr. SIMS. He held out to the end and voted to the end as a member of the committee, and finally voted against the bill. I understand that he made himself persona non grata to one of these great companies by the performance of his duty in that matter to such an extent that his name with them has been "mud" ever since.

Mr. MUDD. There is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to require hereafter, by appropriate regulations, all street railway companies operating in the District of Columbia to sprinkle, at such times as the Commissioners may deem necessary, all of that portion of the streets or avenues within the fire limits of the city of Washington occupied by their tracks and lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of such roads and for a distance of not less than 2 feet from and exterior to such tracks on each side thereof. After promulgating the regulations herein authorized and required, should any street railway company in the District of Columbia fail or refuse to comply therewith, the Commissioners shall cause said sprinkling to be done as other sprinkling of streets is done in the District of Columbia and collect the cost of doing said work from said railway companies in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways, as provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph beginning on page 33, line 12, and ending on page 34, line 7, that it is new legislation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman whether he makes this point of order because he thinks it is undesirable legislation, or does he make it simply because, technically, the provision is subject to the point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I make it because it is subject to the point of order, and because, if legislation of this character should be enacted, it should come out of a committee that has jurisdiction of purely legislative matters.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The street railway company came before us, and there was no strenuous opposition to this. I will not pretend that they favored this legislation, but there was no very serious opposition by them to it. It would not, I suppose, be very expensive, and it seemed to us it was so exceedingly desirable, so exceedingly to the advantage of every resident of the District, and so fair to the city that I did not suppose even the gentleman's susceptibilities as a member of the District Committee would be hurt by our putting it on here. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. Of course we do not wish to encroach upon the gentleman's committee in any case except a very simple case of obvious justice and advantage, which can be secured so easily here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I allow no man in this House to outdo me in honoring the Committee on Appropriations, especially that branch of the Committee on Appropriations that has to do with the District appropriation bill, but I reserve the right to the proper committee to bring out such legislation as shall permanently affect the policies of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman object to the provision because it proposes an unnecessary and onerous burden upon the street railway company?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; I am not taking the street railway company into account at all, as I understand from the gentleman representing the committee that the street railway company really acquiesced in the matter; and if they acquiesced, they were as Greeks bearing gifts.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one more question? Would the gentleman think it would be advantageous to the public to have such a provision executed? What I mean is, Would the gentleman think it just to the public to have the street railway companies sprinkle that part of the street on which their tracks run?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is a matter to which I have given very little consideration. It has not been before us.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman think it detrimental to the best interests of the community to have the streets sprinkled?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; not at all. On the contrary, I quite agree with the policy of sprinkling streets.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any serious objection to having the streets sprinkled in any event?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; that is a simple question; just as simple as the want of the right of the Committee on Appropriations to bring out legislative bills.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if the Committee on the District of Columbia have considered this proposition, and if there is any measure that they probably will report within a reasonable time bearing upon this subject?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not recall a bill now before that committee for consideration upon this subject.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman further, for fear he may be actuated in the objection that he has made by solicitude for the railways, if he knows the aggregate amount of taxation paid by the street-railway companies in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know the exact tax they pay, and I am in no way actuated by solicitude for the street railways.

Mr. MADDEN. It is $72,000, including the real estate taxes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand they pay 4 per cent on the gross receipts in addition to the tax on real estate.

Mr. MADDEN. It amounts to $72,000. And they pay $720,000 in dividends, and one company is capitalized for $12,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I have no interest in the street railway companies; I am here insisting on the right of the proper committee to report proper legislation, and I am insisting on that right just as I have seen the gentleman from Iowa insist on the right of his committee to have jurisdiction over certain branches of legislation.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Kansas has never heard the gentleman from Iowa insist on a question of jurisdiction over matters that the committee had abandoned or where his committee had failed to act; there has been no question of that kind. When we have raised questions of jurisdiction, it was because we were willing to do our duty and take the responsibility. We have never sat back and said: "We will not perform this duty and neither shall you." [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I deny with equal emphasis that the Committee on the District of Columbia has refused to act on this matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will not say that it has refused, but here is the fact that it has not acted, and here is the fact that the gentleman is making a point of order against another committee that has performed a public duty.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Iowa, or any other gentleman in this House, will prepare a bill covering this proposition, the District of Columbia Committee will give it early and speedy consideration.

Mr. MADDEN. But will you bring it out of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Speaking for myself, I will say that I will.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman is only one of seventeen.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. I am a member of that committee, and I say I will vote for it.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to state that the acquiescence of the street railway company in the sprinkling of the streets was like unto Greeks bearing gifts.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I said if the street railway companies were desirous of that provision in the bill, they must have come like Greeks bearing gifts.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman mean by that? I never heard of any gifts being borne to the committee at this end of the Capitol, or of a gift being borne in that direction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the gentleman has quite misunderstood me.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me, we are offering this for unanimous consent. Why should the gentleman object to it if he is in favor of it? Why should the gentleman object? I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and let it go in.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are many phases of legislation affecting the street railway companies that might be covered in a bill, taking up the whole matter of their taxation, and not allow them to pay their taxes for doing a little job here and a little job there, and in that way make it impossible to get a bill considered in this House that would go into the whole question of street railway taxation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell us of a few of the phases that could be remedied?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I trust the gentleman will withhold his point of order; I want to say a word. It does seem to me that it is so clear a case that the gentleman from Kansas ought not to object. The president of one of the street railway companies appeared before the committee and made no objection whatever, and recognized the value and importance of this proposition to the traveling public, both on the street cars and on foot, and said they could do it at a minimum cost. He had not the slightest objection. If the gentleman from Kansas or any other gentleman would go up and down the street that I travel over—Fourteenth street—his face and eyes will be filled with dust from the street car line.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would say to the gentleman that Fourteenth street has no monopoly on dirt and dust matter in this city.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am very glad to know that. If you pass a street crossing just after a street car has passed rapidly by, you find yourself in a cloud of dust. Not only that, but this is closely allied with street cleaning. I can not see for the life of me, when a thing is so clearly in the interest of the health and comfort and cleanliness of the people, without material cost to those affected by it, why somebody here should rise up and say it shall not be done simply on a technical point. I hope the gentleman will withdraw, even now, his objection and let it pass.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask these gentlemen this question. I have heard them talking about justice and fair play and all that sort of thing. I would like to ask them this: When we reach that portion of the bill in reference to teachers' wages in this District, whether or not they will consent to an amendment raising them?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will tell the gentleman just the attitude our committee has taken on that. I think the teachers' wages ought to be changed, and I recognize that is a matter which belongs to the gentleman's committee, and therefore this committee, knowing it was before the gentleman's committee and that his committee had reported a bill upon it, has refrained sedulously from meddling with the subject. We simply reported perfunctorily what was put before us by the school board, thinking that we would wait until the House under the gentleman's lead treated that subject, and then in the Senate whatever bill the gentleman carried through would be put on. Is not that the proper position for us to take?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman must have known that we have reported a bill to increase the teachers' wages, and that on the next District day, next Monday, we expect to bring it before the House.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. There are other bills that could have been taken up at this time. The Navy bill is ready, the agricultural bill is ready, and the gentleman and his committee could have waited a few days until we had an opportunity to present that matter to the House, and then this matter could have been all taken and determined right now.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If the gentleman means to intimate that we took this matter up now so as to prevent that——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. No; I do not.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. He is mistaken about that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I simply ask the gentleman now if he will consent to an amendment covering that question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not think I would, for this reason: I think that is a matter which ought to be reported out and considered at length in the House, and I do not want all that contest and debate to come on this bill. I would rather get our bill through.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is it; and when we raise the question on other matters that are matters for legislation before the District Committee, you gentlemen seem to rise up and think there is something unfair about it. There are half a dozen matters in here that are purely legislative matters.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It seems to me the gentleman is inconsistent. We are taking this position: That to legislate is the prerogative of the gentleman's committee. We think that whole school question belongs to his committee.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is not this matter we are talking about now the prerogative of our committee, and also the bridge question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes; but the gentleman's committee had not as yet acted upon it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Why does not the gentleman introduce a bill, if he wants the streets sprinkled, and present it before our committee? I pledge him for one that it will not be smothered.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Nobody introduced a bill and presented it to our committee, but when the matter came up incidentally—and it never came before us until the hearings in preparing this bill—we saw the possibility of giving the public better service. It is a subject so simple and slight that it did not seem to us possible that the susceptibilities of the District Committee would be offended by it, and therefore we put it in really, as you might say, asking unanimous consent, pointing out that it was not properly in our jurisdiction. Any big proposition, like the school question, we would not have put in, because we recognize that is an elaborate matter, which the proper committee ought to consider carefully, and we did not interfere with it. For that reason we have left that absolutely to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I can say to the gentleman in advance now that I think the streets ought to be sprinkled, but it does seem to me that you gentlemen ought to let that matter come before the proper committee and be willing to do it, and if the gentleman will introduce a bill, I will pledge him the committee will take it up at its next meeting.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Personally I have been solicitous not to interfere with the prerogatives of that committee. I appreciate that it is best for legislation here that each committee should attend to its own business and not interfere with others, but when a matter comes before us so small as this street sprinkling I did not think it could possibly offend anybody to have us put it in as a request for unanimous consent, and I did not think anybody could object to it. I recognize the right of the gentleman to object. I have no sensitiveness because they strike it out. I realize they had a perfect right to; I am only sorry they feel that way about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] or the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] if there was not a positive promise made here last year that if we would let up on that fight for the increase of teachers' wages the District appropriation bill would bring in a proposition at this session to raise the pay of teachers?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there was something of that kind as I remember very distinctly; but in the meantime the teachers and those who are associated with them, namely, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and gentlemen in this House who are earnest advocates of the advancement of salaries on the part of teachers, have gone to the District Committee, introduced their bills, and are seeking to bring in legislation on the part of that committee, thus relieving the Appropriations Committee from doing the thing that it would otherwise have done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but that ends this way: What we wanted then and what some of us want now is a chance to discuss the simple proposition of reorganizing the teachers' wages in this town, and what the District of Columbia Committee has done is to report a bill that not only treats the question of salaries, which is enough to be treated by itself at one time, but also treats the entire question in addition to that of reorganizing these schools from top to bottom.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to assume the prerogative of the chairman, but as long as my name has been mentioned in connection with this matter I would say that the committee felt that it could not do anything else than pass favorably upon the recommendations of the Commissioners, presumably the recommendation to the school board and the superintendent, relative to the salaries, pending legislation that had not yet been passed upon by the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I am very sorry it turned out that way, Mr. Chairman, because we were strong enough that day to have appealed from the ruling of the Chairman and overruled his decision and put that amendment on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for a couple of minutes more just to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's request is granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I just want to say that last year I was not on this subcommittee, and this is the first time I have ever heard of any such agreement. Moreover, I confess that if I had known it, after seeing the sensitiveness to-day which my friends on the District of Columbia Committee have exhibited toward any attempt on our part to assume any of their prerogatives, I should hardly have dared to offer so important a provision, so subject to a point of order, as that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, you plead an alibi.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan asks why we did not substantially embody in this bill the provisions of the measure that has been brought before the House with a favorable report by the Committee on the District of Columbia which provides for raising the teachers' salaries. I am astonished that the gentleman should ask that, though the question indicates his thorough unselfishness. For years and years there has been a clamor within the District of Columbia in behalf of the poorly paid teachers in the public schools. For months and months the mail of every Member of Congress has been laden with letters appealing to each one of us to aid these poorly paid teachers to secure an increase in their salaries. The Committee on the District of Columbia had, and always has had, jurisdiction of the matter; but here, as usual, the Committee on the District of Columbia has procrastinated, it has waited, it has delayed, until the patience of the people of the District of Columbia has been worn threadbare, and the public schools are losing some of their best teachers, and at last the Committee on the District of Columbia is about to act. It is about to bring before the House a bill to grant this long-denied request, this long-delayed act of justice to the long-suffering public teacher. Now, why should the Committee on Appropriations deprive the Committee on the District of Columbia of the little credit they ought to get out of that measure by embodying it substantially within the provisions of this appropriation bill? Would it be kind or fair for us to do so? Why, of course not.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I——

Mr. BURLESON. Do you think we are so selfish as to take from the Committee on the District of Columbia the credit for the only good thing that they have done in years and years? [Laughter and applause.] And yet the gentleman from Michigan is so unselfish, the gentleman from Michigan, who, by the by, must be in a woeful minority on his committee, seems now so anxious that this long-delayed justice should at last be done that he comes before this House and upbraids the gentleman from Massachusetts because he has not done that which his committee has refused to do for so long a time.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my friend a question? In this debate over jurisdiction, what is to become of justice?

Mr. BURLESON. That is a very pertinent question; I certainly hope that the poor teacher is not to be the victim of this contest. If so, it will not be my fault. On yesterday, in a speech I made, I declared in favor of increasing the teachers' salaries, and I assure you that I now only await an opportunity to cast my vote upon the measure that the gentleman from Michigan says that his committee has at last brought before this House for consideration. We are all anxious to do it. The teachers are so poorly paid, and we deplore the fact that they have been compelled to wait so long, because——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman object to the amendment when it comes?

Mr. BURLESON (continuing). The rights and privileges accorded to corporations in this town are so generously large that the still, feeble voice of the poor school-teachers has not yet made itself heard, notwithstanding the fact that they are paid less than many wage-earners—yes, even common laborers.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the District of Columbia has procrastinated for all these years in the matter of doing substantial justice to these underpaid instructors of our children, and yet——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. When we reach that portion of the bill, will the gentleman object to an amendment increasing the pay of teachers? Answer the question yes or no, squaretoed.

Mr. BURLESON. I shall answer it in my own peculiar way. I am profoundly gratified and astonished to see this exhibition of unselfishness on the part of the gentleman from Michigan, this anxiety to give all of the credit to the Committee on Appropriations for the only good work that his committee has done since I have been here as a Member of this body.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman anticipate when the teachers will have their salaries raised?

Mr. BURLESON. If they are to wait on the Committee on the District of Columbia to voluntarily act, the millennium will probably have arrived before this justice is done them.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to set the gentleman from Texas right. While I am not a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia that handled the school bill, I know that subcommittee has been at work many days trying to perfect a bill for the increase of salaries and such additional legislation in connection therewith as is asked for by the teachers and the people of the District. But, as you know, in this beautiful, ideal, model government of ours we have got to hear everybody, from California to Kalamazoo and everywhere else, as to how to do things here.

The subcommittee had to give hearings to people from everywhere who wanted to tell them how to run things in the District, and the chairman of that subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, General MORRELL, gave eighteen or nineteen days' hearings on the school bill, and more than half of the time was given to people who never sent a child to school in the District of Columbia and who probably never will. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, General MORRELL, is at this moment drafting the report on that bill, which has been ordered reported by the full committee. He was not content with information obtained by being present and personally conducting all the hearings on the bill, but has since carefully read the printed hearings, consisting of many hundred pages, and has most carefully considered and digested same, as will no doubt appear from his report when printed. I have no doubt that there is not a member of the Appropriations Committee that has given more hours during the present session of Congress of hard, painstaking, patriotic labor to his duties than has the gentleman from Pennsylvania, General MORRELL, and the remarks in criticism of the District Committee made by my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] can not with any degree of justice apply to General MORRELL and his coworkers on the subcommittee of the District Committee having charge of the school bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask my friend a question. Why did General MORRELL or anybody else put in all this time listening to people that had no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy?

Mr. SIMS. I can give the gentleman the best reason on earth. If some gentleman or lady from the gentleman's district should come to him and tell him he wanted to be heard by General MORRELL'S subcommittee, he would go and ask Mr. MORRELL to please hear this gentleman or lady, as they had something of value to suggest, and of course the hearing would be given.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. MORRELL ought to tell those who would go with me to get out.

Mr. SIMS. The size and persuasiveness of the gentleman are enough to preclude anything of that sort. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I ask a question?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I understand the gentleman says that he has to hear everybody, from Kalamazoo to somewhere else. I am from Kalamazoo [laughter], and you will hear from me.

Mr. SIMS. I am certain the committee would have been benefited by hearing the gentleman from Kalamazoo. But, Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with this committee in attempting to ingraft much needed new legislation in this bill, even though it encroaches upon the jurisdiction of the committee of which I have the honor to be a member. But why are you not consistent? When you want us to let you legislate, and we want to help you, you will not let us do it.

I offered an amendment to put a tax on stocks and bonds and notes and money, with which to get funds to pay these teachers, and increase policemen's salaries, and for other increased expenses; and the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of this subcommittee, said that was something of which my committee had jurisdiction, and it ought to be considered by that committee, and out of consideration for my committee, that I did not ask or did not want, he makes the point of order against it for our benefit. Then he falls out with us because we make a point of order against other new legislation in this bill over which we do have primary jurisdiction.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will my friend yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will my friend please prophesy as to the time when these teachers will get justice? That is what we would like to know something about. We do not care anything about the jurisdiction of the two committees.

Mr. SIMS. If you will not raise technical objection, and let us provide taxes to raise the money, we will have the funds wherewith to satisfy the demands of justice in the way of paying increased salaries. Why should not the bondholder and the stockholder, worth millions of dollars in that kind of property, in the District of Columbia contribute to educate the poor of the District?

I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will repent; he has too good a face not to do so. I expect he will withdraw the point of order and let that amendment go through, because your committee has already committed sacrilege on our committee, as the only personal tax we now have was imposed by this committee on an appropriation bill like this when the committee was presided over by the present great Speaker of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. The District of Columbia seems to have fallen upon an evil day. Objection is made to a provision in the appropriation bill because Members assert that the committee has not been able to obtain sufficient information regarding the proposed legislation, and yet gentlemen on the District Committee, when they attempt to legislate, assert that they have too much information. Members of the District Committee object to any legislation initiated by the Committee on Appropriations and then generously ask the Committee on Appropriations to permit the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia to put anything they please upon the appropriation bill. Members of this House seem to have forgotten the experience through which the Appropriations Committee recently passed. The subcommittee framing this bill went into the consideration of the bill fresh from the experience that the committee had had in this House, and it wisely, in my judgment, refused to incorporate into this bill legislative provisions, excepting such as were imperative in connection with the recommendations that were made for appropriations. One was in connection with the new bridge, and the Committee of the Whole acted as the Committee on Appropriations desired it should in eliminating the entire appropriation if the necessary new legislation could not be had.

In considering the appropriation for the cleaning of streets it developed that large discomfort arose to the citizens of the District by reason of the speed with which the street cars traversed the streets, raising a cloud of dust and annoying the passengers on the cars as well as the travelers on foot, and as the representatives of the railway companies stated that they had no particular objection to sprinkling the streets within the restrictions provided in this bill the committee supposed that nobody else would interpose any objection to the railroad company doing this eleemosynary work. Some gentlemen object, however, on the ground that another committee has jurisdiction and that somebody should call the attention of that committee to the matter. I find no fault with the gentleman raising the point of order, because he has that right under the rules. But this is one of those peculiar things that develop in the course of hearings in the preparation of a bill, and the committee has no time to introduce a bill and take chances on its passing and being enacted into law.

It was suggested that the Committee on Appropriations take into consideration the question of increasing the salaries of the school-teachers. At that time there were four or five bills pending in the District Committee. The committee was holding hearings. It was conducting an investigation of the subject, and it has perfected a bill satisfactory to the members of that committee. That bill must be considered in the House, and after it is considered in the House it must be considered in another place, and by the time it finally gets to the Executive for approval it is difficult to say in what shape it will be. There were so many different things involved in that question that the committee, in my judgment, wisely decided not to attempt to interfere with the question on the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys; purchasing and expense of erecting and maintaining new lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures, moving lamp-posts, painting lamp-posts and lanterns; replacing and repairing lamp-posts and lanterns damaged or unfit for service; for rent of storeroom, cartage of material, livery, and other necessary items, $200,000: Provided, That no more than $15 per annum shall be paid for each gas lamp equipped with a self-regulating flat-flame burner so adjusted as to secure under all ordinary variations of pressure and density a consumption of 5 cubic feet of gas per hour, not more than $20 per annum for each gas or oil lamp equipped with an incandescent mantle burner of not less than 60 candlepower. And during the fiscal year 1907 the price prescribed by Congress for lighting each street lamp in the District of Columbia with gas or oil shall be construed to include the cost of the illuminating material used, lighting and extinguishing lamps, repairing, painting, cleaning, purchasing, and expense of erecting and maintaining lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures: Provided, That all of said lamps shall burn every night, on the average, from fifteen minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise: And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may purchase, erect, light, and maintain such posts, lanterns, signs, and fixtures for street designation purposes, in addition to those mentioned above, as in their judgment may be necessary, which lamps shall not be subject to the restrictions of this paragraph except as to the time of burning: And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to enter into one-year or three-year contracts for any one of the above systems of lighting by gas or oil lamps equipped with incandescent mantle burners of not less than 60 candlepower.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to know who has the contract for the electric lighting in this city?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know the exact name of the company. There is only one corporation.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Another question. When I came into the Chamber yesterday I thought I heard the gentleman of the subcommittee [Mr. MADDEN] say that some outside company had the contract for lighting the city with gas, and that that was sublet to somebody else. I should like some information on that.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The statement the gentleman heard must have been a statement about the Welsbach lights. The gentleman knows what they are, I suppose.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The contract for furnishing those lights is let to the Welsbach Company instead of to the local gas company. The Welsbach Company take the contract, and then they get their gas from the gas company. That is the only instance of that kind that I know of. The gas company submits no bid for the lights in which these Welsbach burners are used, but the Welsbach Company comes in and submits a bid and gets the contract, and then makes an arrangement with the gas company to get the gas from them.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me explain what I said yesterday.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes; if you please. I did not get all your statement yesterday, and I have not had time to read it in the RECORD this morning.

Mr. MADDEN. In the first place, the streets are lighted principally with gas. They have two kinds of light, one a flat-flame burner and one an incandescent light, the incandescent light being created by a Welsbach burner. The Welsbach burner is controlled by the manufacturers, so the gas company here says, but the fact is that anybody can buy a Welsbach mantle. Instead of the gas company in the District of Columbia buying the Welsbach mantles, and furnishing the incandescent lights, they refuse to do that, on the theory that the Welsbach mantle is controlled by a monopoly, and that the monopoly refuses to furnish the mantle except where it furnishes the light. So this company, which is said to have a monopoly on the mantles, comes to the city of Washington and bids for the lighting of certain streets, and receives as compensation for that lighting $25 per lamp. The lamps on which the Welsbach burner is used only use 3½ feet of gas per hour. The cost of the mantle at retail ranges from 15 to 20 cents for each mantle; but, as a matter of fact, the mantle can be bought for 8 cents at wholesale by any gas company in the country. Three and a half feet per hour, for four thousand hours per year, would be 14,000 feet of gas. That would cost $14. That would leave $11 to be added to the $14 for the payment for the incandescent burner to create the light. As a matter of fact, the light can be furnished for less money with the use of the Welsbach mantle than it can on a flat-flame lamp.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I do not know anything about what is a fair or just price. I should like to ask you whether in reducing the price of the electric lighting and the gas lighting you acted upon your own motion, or whether you had any hearings and there was any proof taken on that point?

Mr. MADDEN. I think we had no hearings that demonstrated the value of the commodity.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then you actually reduced the price without any hearings upon the subject?

Mr. MADDEN. We had the representatives of the companies before us, but they would not admit that the price that we indicated was a fair price; but the fact is that in all other municipalities of the country the price at which the public is furnished gas is not to exceed one-half the price at which it is furnished to private consumers.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Right there, do you know what the price is for gas furnished for lighting the streets in other cities about the same size?

Mr. MADDEN. About 50 cents a thousand.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What price was it fixed at here?

Mr. MADDEN. The price was fixed here at 75 cents a thousand.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman says that the price in other cities is 50 cents, but he is willing to pay 75 here.

Mr. MADDEN. We recommended this because we were afraid that we wouldn't get it if we adopted the lower price.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. But the gentleman says 50 cents is a fair price?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I am willing to agree with the gentleman from Michigan if he will offer an amendment to make it 50 cents.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Well, the "gentleman from Michigan" doesn't know anything about it. I am getting what information I can from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I am glad to furnish the information.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow me, what is the reduction made by the recommendation now?

Mr. MADDEN. The recommendation now is to reduce the price 25 cents a thousand to the public.

Mr. MANN. What is the price that the District now pays?

Mr. MADDEN. One dollar a thousand.

Mr. MANN. Is the price computed on the amount of gas used or so much per lamp per month?

Mr. MADDEN. On the amount of gas used. Each lamp burns 5 feet of gas per hour.

Mr. MANN. That is estimated?

Mr. MADDEN. No; that is the actual figure. They burn four thousand hours during the year and that makes 20,000 feet of gas.

Mr. MANN. Who pays the cost of lighting?

Mr. MADDEN. The cost of lighting and cleaning the lamps is included in the price. The objection that the gas company made to the reduction of price was that it had to furnish the lamps, but on the other side of the question is this situation: The gas company furnishes a meter to the private consumer and each meter costs as much as one of these lamps, and in addition to the cost of the meter they have to make out about 40,000 bills to the private consumer, where they only have to make one bill to the District, and, besides that, they have to read the meters.

Mr. MANN. Yes; they have to read the meters every month.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. You reduced the price of the electric light $5 a lamp.

Mr. MADDEN. Five dollars a lamp—from $85 to $80—on the theory that in most cities $65 is the price charged for an arc-light lamp.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Of what candlepower?

Mr. MADDEN. A thousand candlepower.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. And these arc lamps here are of a thousand candlepower?

Mr. MADDEN. They are said to be.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Has the gentleman any knowledge of what it actually costs?

Mr. MADDEN. There was no evidence to show just exactly what it cost, but the committee believed that if $65 was a fair price in other cities, surely $80 was an exorbitant price here, and $85 was an extortionate price.

Mr. MANN. How long has the District been paying a dollar a thousand for gas? And how much is the present price for electric light?

Mr. MADDEN. Some time ago Congress sought to authorize the present gas company to purchase the gas company which is located in Georgetown, and the recommendation of the committee seeking to authorize the purchase provided that the $20 shares of the gas company were to be increased to $100 per share. This purchase was to be authorized, with the understanding that the price of gas, which was then being charged in Georgetown at $1.25 per thousand, would be reduced to $1 a thousand. If the recommendation of the District Committee was adopted, the capital of the company would have been increased five times what it was then without the investment of an additional dollar. All corporations in the District are required to make annual statements to Congress or to the Commissioners of the District, and this is the only company which refuses to obey the law requiring it to make these statements.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is there no penalty attached to the law?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know the details, so I can not answer the question intelligently.

Mr. MANN. When was that law passed?

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman refers to the law requiring reports from corporations, I can not give the date.

Mr. MANN. Was that a bill reported out of the District Committee?

Mr. PAYNE. That bill did not become a law, did it?

Mr. MADDEN. No; the House refused to ratify the committee recommendation.

Mr. MANN. After a very hot contest.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. When did the gentleman say it was passed?

Mr. MADDEN. It was not passed. So that no one to-day knows what the capital of the gas company is. At that time it was about $2,000,000, and no additional money was to be invested in the company if the consolidation were permitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,103,725.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 17, by making that $1,253,725.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, page 43, strike out "one hundred and three" and insert "two hundred and fifty-three;" so that it will read "one million two hundred and fifty-three thousand seven hundred and twenty-five dollars."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that this is a total, and before he attempts to amend a total he should at least attempt to amend the items that would go up to make the total.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not the schedule here myself.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed without prejudice until the gentleman obtains his schedule. It would be too bad to have it missed here because he has not the schedule.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this: That I have not had charge of that portion of the District bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] is chairman of that subcommittee, and he is unable to be here. Of course the District Committee expect on Monday to present that bill to the House, and if it passes the House it will require an appropriation of about $151,000. I mean that it will require an appropriation of that amount.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In addition to the existing appropriation?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Assuming that the bill to be reported on Monday should become a law, this present provision of the bill will have passed the House; and if so, I think it is safe to draw the conclusion that it will not do the teachers any good until next year.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But assuming, however, that the bill does not pass the House next Monday, what will the situation then be?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, I presume the bill will pass.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me this is all premature.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Not a bit of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The point of order will be insisted upon. The business ought to be done regularly. Let the other bill come up and be acted upon, and if it should become a law then the appropriation will be made. I will object to anything that looks to an inclusion of that appropriation until there is a law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what his point of order is.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, when I made the point of order I did not know what the gentleman's proposition was.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to amend by changing the sum total.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I can not see how that is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; it is. Is there any law authorizing it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is a total.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That does not make any difference. We are making an appropriation, and it is presumed the money we appropriate is authorized by law. It must be for objects authorized by law, and the reported total, it is patent on the face of the bill, covers and includes all of the items contained in the paragraph. Now, here is an addition of $150,000 to the total to be appropriated out of the Treasury that has absolutely no support in law and there is no basis for it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is only $150,000 additional, not one million.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is simply made to a column of figures, a total of what precedes. The Chair as at present informed does not see how a point of order would lie against that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is the total at the bottom of a series of appropriations. Does that total have any significance anyway? If it has none of course the increase will not be open to a point of order, but if it has any significance I think it would.

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a question for the Chair. That is a question for the executive officer when he comes to administer the law.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states plainly that this is to cover provisions of a supposed law yet to be made. The bill has not yet been reported to the House.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Oh, yes; it has been reported, and we expect to take it up on Monday. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. To that extent, then, I am in error, but it certainly has not been passed on by the House. It is an assumption that the bill will be passed as recommended. It seems to me that the natural order would be to first make your law, and then make such appropriation as the law requires.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a statute which especially provides that the totals are not the law, that the specific items make the law, and the gentleman's amendment would not accomplish anything if adopted. If the gentleman should offer to amend the salary of each particular teacher, I think that would be effective. I am heartily in favor of this increase. There is not anybody here who is more so than I am, yet I do not think it ought to be put on here. I do not wish the gentleman's committee to be so suddenly self-sacrificing and to thrust upon us this jurisdiction so unexpectedly, because what we do put into our bill we like to have a chance to consider in committee. If the gentleman's committee had come to us and asked us to prepare a bill increasing the teachers' salaries, we would have gladly done it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I wish the gentleman had thought of some of these things in drafting his bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. We did not dare to. We knew we should offend the gentleman's delicate susceptibilities. If the gentleman had come to us, we certainly would have done it. But members of the gentleman's committee have objected to-day when we ventured to take from them matters much less important and complex and far-reaching than this.

This amendment of the gentleman does not accomplish anything at all. I do not care whether it is adopted or not, but I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If it does not make any difference, withdraw the objection and let it be adopted.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my point of order.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. It can not do any harm, and it might do some good.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; it makes an absurd bill, Mr. Chairman; that is all. It makes a preposterous bill, and I do not wish it amended in a ridiculous manner.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Is it not a fact your bill ought to be laid aside until the District Committee has reported and until you know how much money is needed?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That will be put on in the Senate.

Mr. WALDO. You mean the House is not going to do anything about it, and the Senate will do it; that is the result?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I am earnestly in favor of doing something about it.

Mr. WALDO. Why not lay the bill aside until the District Committee has reported, and then you will know where you are?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Because this appropriation bill is only one of several yet to be passed, and we want to get it through the House and in the Senate.

Mr. WALDO. Then will you let this section go over until the bill is concluded?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It will be concluded before Monday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if the bill fixing the salaries of school-teachers passes the House, it will not be a law, and we could not legislate in accordance with a bill that had not passed the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not until it had passed the Senate and been signed by the President.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I understand, the bill that has been reported provides for an automatic increase of salary, based upon length of service, which, in my judgment, is proper. Now, merely increasing items in this bill will not enact into law the provisions which the gentleman wants and which should be put in.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I do not want anything except what is exactly right. We expect on Monday to present that bill to the House, and we hope it will pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So do I.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. And it will require $150,000 additional to pay teachers. If it passes the House, it will go to the Senate, and I hope it will be passed there and sent to the President. After that is done, if it is found that it does not, and you let this amendment go on it, it can be stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: If Congress passes the bill increasing the salary of school-teachers, the increase will commence, I believe, on the 1st of July, and there will be sufficient money to pay that schedule of salaries even if provision is not made in this bill; and there is not the slightest doubt that the first thing Congress would do at the next session, in a deficiency bill, which always passes at the short session before the holidays, would be to provide sufficient money to pay the teachers the salaries fixed by law. I undertake to say there is no objection in the House to reasonable increase in salaries, but there should be in the bill fixing them provision for automatic increases based upon length of service; and it would be impossible on an appropriation bill to enact properly such legislation. I have not the slightest doubt that if the committee brings up that bill on Monday the essential features at least will be adopted by the House, and that what the gentleman desires to accomplish will be accomplished.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What can be the harm if you let this amendment go on? And if there is no need of this it need not be used.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will call the gentleman's attention to this fact: He is asking this House to agree to an amendment which practically says that 2 and 3 make 7, not 5; and it can have no effect whatever even if it be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Tennesssee has expired. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; I withdraw the point of order, and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH) there were—ayes 14, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it contains any increases in salaries of teachers?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes; it includes the ordinary increase, and they increase the number of teachers, and that automatically——

Mr McCLEARY of Minnesota. Affords an opportunity for promotion?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Just as the gentleman's bill always did.

The Clerk read as follows:

For harbor patrol: For one lieutenant in the police department, who shall also be harbor master, $1,320; one sergeant, $1,140; one engineer, $840; one fireman, $480; one watchman, $420; one deck hand, $480; in all, $4,680.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, inadvertently I allowed the reading to go by. I would like unanimous consent to go back to page 55, and in line 20 I wish to strike out the words "five hundred and forty" and insert "six hundred." This is in accordance with previous appropriations, and it puts these police matrons and matrons at the House of Detention exactly upon a par.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] asks unanimous consent to return to page 55, line 20, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I also offer an amendment in order to make the total right, as follows:

In line 21, page 55, add, after the word "thousand," "one hundred and twenty."

Mr. KEIFER. That will be all right.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What will be the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 55, strike out "five hundred and forty" and insert "six hundred."
In line 21, after "thousand," insert "one hundred and twenty."

Mr. KEIFER. This will increase the total $120.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I see now the effect of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Justices of the peace: For six justices of the peace, at $2,000 each, and the further sum of $250 each for rent, stationery, and other expenses; in all, $13,500.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph. It changes existing law from $3,000 to $2,000 in the salaries of the justices of the peace.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I could not hear the gentleman's point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PEARRE. The point of order is on the word "two" instead of "three." The existing law provides $3,000 for justices of the peace.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that the existing law is $3,000?

Mr. PEARRE. Three thousand dollars; yes, sir. If the gentleman will turn to the code——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to understand this question exactly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The present law provides a salary of $3,000, but for years only $2,000 has been appropriated. Of course we are not obliged to appropriate the full amount.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it in violation of law?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Of course it is not in violation of law.

Mr. PEARRE. It changes existing law, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, in House document, volume 80, Parliamentary Precedents of the House, I find on page 323, section 554, the law having provided for an officer and fixing his salary it is not in order to appropriate for this officer and create another in his place. It seems to me under the principle of that rule, Mr. Chairman, that this is a change of existing law, and therefore is subject to the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Do we understand that the gentleman claims that we do not appropriate enough, and therefore we do not appropriate according to law?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; because the law provides that $3,000 shall be the salary of the justices of the peace.

Mr. KEIFER. We are not obliged to appropriate all the law requires at one time, are we?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As I understand, the statute creating these positions provides $3,000, but Congress has been going on from year to year and only appropriating $2,000. Now, if that was a change of law, that law fixing $3,000 has been changed long since, and therefore it is $2,000, if the gentleman's position be correct.

Mr. KEIFER. That is not a change of law. That is a failure to make the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I contend, myself, it is not a change of law, but I wanted to manifest to the gentleman from Maryland, if I could, that his proposition was unsound; if it meant a change of law, it is a change that has already taken place in the past.

Mr. PEARRE. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Say we appropriated $2,000 last year. If it is changed to $3,000, then the present law is $2,000. Hence it is no change.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It has been held many times that a failure to appropriate the full amount fixed by law is not a change of existing law. Congress in its discretion may appropriate a less amount. If the gentleman will look at page 355 of the Manual and Digest, he will find that it has been so held a great many times.

It is not a change of existing law for the House to decline to make appropriation for salaries fixed by law.

So held in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

The appropriation of a less sum than the amount fixed by law for the salary of an officer is not a change of law, even though it be accompanied by such a condition as practically effects a reduction of the salary.

That was held in the Fifty-fourth Congress, in the Fifty-seventh Congress, and in the Fifty-eighth Congress. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PEARRE. Then I move to amend by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, strike out the word "two" and insert "three."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house, District of Columbia: For the following force necessary for the care and protection of the court-house in the District of Columbia, under the direction of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia: Engineer, $1,200; three watchmen, at $720 each; three firemen, at $720 each; five laborers, at $480 each; and three assistant messengers, at $720 each; in all, $10,080, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against so much of the paragraph under consideration as is included beginning with the word "and," in line 18, and ending with the word "each," in line 19.

Mr. Chairman, this is a provision for the allowance of three assistant messengers to six courts, six subdivisions of the district court in this District. Under the present law, which will be found in the sixty-fifth section of the code, in the fourteenth line, there is provided a messenger for each one of these courts, seven messengers in all, one of them belonging to the marshal's office. I make the point of order that this is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up the law to which he refers?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I realize the fact that the law provides for seven messengers. Now, the present Chairman has decided that the House is not obliged to appropriate the full sum for any one officer. We have simply failed to appropriate for four of these messengers. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. We are not obliged to appropriate for every officer.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to page 326 of Parliamentary Precedents, in section 559, where this proposition is found cited:

A proposition to appropriate for but one Civil Service Commissioner instead of for the three provided by the statute was held to be a change of existing law.

Now, it seems to me that that is on all fours with this, and this provision must go out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In that case a failure to appropriate for two Commissioners would in effect be a change of the law creating the Commission. But this is a different proposition. The code provides that there shall be certain messengers in certain distinctive places, and Congress may refuse to provide the messengers in some of those places. The ruling to which the gentleman from Maryland calls attention was that a change would be made only to appropriate for one member of a board of three, and the doing of that would in effect change the law, so as to make the Commission consist of but one member.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will ask the gentleman from New York whether the effect of this change is not to deprive each court of its necessary officers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not in my judgment. It does not take away the employees that are necessary to the proper conduct of the judicial business.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It operates to reduce the force there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and that can be done in this bill. The number provided seemed to the committee to be sufficient.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not think, with all due deference to the gentleman from New York, that you give them the necessary force when you take away these messengers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my opinion.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And I have a different opinion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And after investigation I still adhere to my original opinion.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I would call the attention of the Chair to the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, section 65, which provides, among other things, that the courts shall be allowed to appoint a messenger for each court in special term, and all other officers necessary to the due administration of justice. Now, there are six courts in the District of Columbia, and existing law provides or requires or allows or empowers the judge of each one of those courts to appoint a messenger. Now, you reduce the messengers by this bill from six to three, and that comes within the ruling to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to call attention to the fact that the code as sent up to the Chair provides for "messengers." The provision of the bill to which the point of order is made is for "assistant messengers."

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are the same officials.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no provision in the bill for messengers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are assistant messengers.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. May I ask the Chair to what section of the code he refers?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 65 of the code provides a messenger for each court in special term.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Responding to the suggestion, I have the hearings before the committee. This question was put to the witness by the chairman of the committee:

What do the seven assistant messengers do?
There is one for each judge and one for the marshal's office. There are six judges of the District courts. The code provides a messenger for each judge and one for the marshal.
You think there is a necessity for seven assistant messengers?
Yes.
Have you messengers?
No, sir; the judges were discussing that, and they thought that the name "assistant messenger" might lead you to believe that there were principal messengers. There are no principal messengers. I understand that an assistant messenger under the law is a technical term, and they get a smaller salary, $60 a month. A messenger receives something more.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the point of order would take the whole provision out, because there is no provision of law at all for assistant messengers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well; I will make the point of order against the whole section.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me just a moment, I think that section 188 of the code provides for the pay of these messengers—$60 a month.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It certainly does.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is the office we seek to retain.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is just it exactly. I have it in my hand here, if it is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan tell the Chair to what section he refers?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I refer to section 65, line 14, of the code, and to section 188 of the code.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Section 65 creates the office and section 188 provides for the pay.

Mr. MUDD. According to the language of this, a new office is created.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Ohio proposes to make a point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will if the Chair rules that an assistant messenger is a new creation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I wish to be heard.

Mr. KEIFER. That might go out as a separte paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have only made the point of order against the separate paragraph.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood you to make it against the whole paragraph, three assistant messengers, at $720 each.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point that it changes the law, because there ought to be seven assistant messengers.

Mr. KEIFER. Should it not be "messengers" instead of "assistant messengers?"

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have been calling them assistant messengers. There is no messenger provided for in the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I know; but there is in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the subcommittee, as to why this provision was made for assistant messengers.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Because it is so in the present appropriation bill. We followed the reading of that just exactly as it is there—assistant messengers—but we have cut down the number.

The CHAIRMAN. The last appropriation bill might make a salary, under the decisions, but could not create an office.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman contend that an appropriation for one year, where you change the phraseology of a permanent law, makes that law thereafter which was not law before?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not know until this minute that the word in the code was "messenger" instead of "assistant messengers," but in putting in the words "assistant messengers" we simply followed existing appropriation law.

That is all I have to say on this point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to inquire if the point of order is made on the ground that the word "assistant" is in there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The point of order is made in order to get rid of cutting down the messengers, and if it is done I will offer an amendment to restore the seven messengers and state the grounds upon which I put it, and that is the appeal of the judges of this court, asking that that little pittance be returned to them in order that the courts may be efficient and able to comply with the statute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say that for the assistant messengers the gentleman's point of order may be good, but I am thoroughly convinced that the committee has the right to appropriate for a number fixed by law, or for a less number, and this provision does not come within the ruling cited by the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that that question is not now presented to the Chair.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio? Why would it not be as well to move an amendment to add three messengers? I can not see the advantage of the gentleman's making a point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am in the fix that a gentleman was a few days ago. I do not want to let go of anything that will right this wrong. I think a serious wrong is being attempted here, through a mistaken idea of economy, in leaving out the efficient force for this court.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill provides for three assistant messengers, at $720 each. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that under the law there are seven messengers provided for, and that the reduction to three would therefore be a change of existing law. The Chair does not feel called upon to either affirm or deny that proposition because the provision in the bill is not for messengers, but for three assistant messengers, and there is no provision in the law for assistant messengers.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. As I understand, the Chair has ruled it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order is not applicable to the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have made the double proposition to the Chair. I made it in the alternative. If the Chair holds the point of order isn't good because we have a right to appropriate for a less number, I make the point of order that it changes the existing law in providing for assistant messengers at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not rule on the question as to the right to provide for a less number, because that question is not before the Chair. As to the point of order that this changes existing law in providing for officers not provided for by law, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: To insert instead of the words just stricken out the words "and three messengers, at $720 each."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 65, line 18, after the word "and," strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven;" and in lines 19 and 20 strike out the words "ten thousand and eighty" and insert the words "twelve thousand nine hundred and sixty."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is to amend a paragraph that has been stricken out.

Mr. OLCOTT. No.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman offer it as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. OLCOTT. No; it is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the amendment, as I understand it, is the pending question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is to strike out "three" and insert "seven."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on that question. The law of the District of Columbia which I hold in my hand, enacted a good many years ago, provides that each one of these court rooms shall have a messenger, at the low price of $60 per month. I do not know anything about the necessities of these courts, but that has been the law during all these years, and each one of these courts has been supplied with a messenger. Now, two of the judges of the courts come to me, and one of them I know very well, and say that they can not get along, that it would in a large part paralyze the business of these courts. A court without a messenger, think of it! A court without any manner of messenger service, a court that can not send to a different room or to the library for a book! They must get off the bench and go on their own errands.

Now, they give three to six courts. How are you going to divide them up? And, then, one of them must belong to the marshal. Gentlemen who have practiced law in the State courts will remember that we have in every one of our courts an officer—in Ohio at least, and in other States where I have entered the court rooms—called the bailiff or deputy sheriff. These take the place of the bailiff; they take the place of the deputy sheriff or deputy marshal, and they serve the purposes of the judges of the courts in the messenger service, properly speaking.

Mr. KEIFER. And of the lawyers also.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of course. They go away to get books for the lawyers and go upon errands for the bar, and in that way facilitate the transaction of business.

Mr. NORRIS. And, I presume, they have the juries in charge also.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes. Now, these judges have said to me that somebody had told a committee heretofore that they had used these messengers for some private purpose, and one of the gentlemen told me—I might name him if I saw fit—that there was not a shadow of foundation for anything of the kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that one of these judges told him that somebody told the committee something else. Who made to the committee any such ridiculous statement as that? Will the gentleman name him?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman thinks I am going to spend my time answering such a question, he will learn better before he gets through. [Laughter.] That question can not be answered. I have not said that I knew of any such man.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman is stating to the House, as an argument, the fact that some judge told him that somebody told the committee something that he does not know anything about, and he communicates that to the committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He did not say any such thing and I have not said any such thing. If the gentleman will cease to interrupt me, I will take it as a great personal favor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can not be any more accurate in his statement of facts, I will wait and reply to him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said that one of the judges said to me that he feared that a statement of that kind had been made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. He did not use the word "feared" at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will state who the gentleman was who told me. He was the Hon. Thomas H. Anderson, and he said he had his information from a report that came to him from the former committee. He feared that the same sort of talk was being made to the committee now. Now, I have made a frank statement. I do not know whom he charged with it or what member of the committee. I will say this: It was not the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Now, then, are we going to paralyze these courts for the pittance that is saved here? This bill has been very generous in the allowance for extra service. It is very liberal and generous in creating some office, and yet here are the courts of the country, the courts of the District of Columbia, entitled to every consideration at the hands of Congress, for they have no means of support or efficiency that are not given to them, and I can state to the House that the entire judicial body of that court condemns this restriction of their facilities. That is all I have to say. I have no interest in it. All I wish to see done is to do the fair thing by a most important tribunal of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is, as the gentleman says, a mere pittance. It is petty. It is a very small matter for the House to be giving its attention to, and yet I do crave the attention of the House to it for a moment and for this reason: The subcommittee as it went over the bill here and there found many small items like this one. The bill is made up of them mostly. We thought there was extravagance here and there and an unnecessary force, and we cut down salaries and cut down the force. They are small things individually, and yet it is those small things which really make an appropriation bill good or bad, and it is because year after year we go on putting on small additions of force and small salaries and then never cutting down a salary or an office that our service grows.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, I can not yield now. Mr. Chairman, take this particular case. It is a very small matter. There was no suggestion made to us of the kind the gentleman speaks of—that these messengers were used for the personal service of the judges. I have no knowledge about that and no intimation has been made one way or the other. What we thought was this: Here are six judges holding six courts all in the same building. They have their bailiffs and criers and all the ordinary paraphernalia of courts. Courts do not necessarily have messengers. I know in my court-house at home we have one messenger, and there are often two courts holding session there, and here are six judges and we have allowed them three messengers.

Is not that enough? They have the bailiff and the other officers, and I think that a messenger half the time for one of those courts is ample. It is a small matter, but I think it is preposterous and ridiculous to say, as the gentleman from Ohio did, that cutting down three messengers is going to paralyze the business of these courts. That is what every officer, who comes before us whose salary we have reduced, or from whose office we have taken a clerk or two, says; he says it will paralyze the business of his office. I do not believe it does, and I do not believe in this case taking off four messengers, leaving them a messenger for every two courts, is going to paralyze the business of the court or is going to in the slightest degree injure the business of the court. Mr. Chairman, a majority of this subcommittee are lawyers. We have partial feelings toward the judges, and we want to treat them fairly, but we saw here an opportunity where we could economize something. That always hurts somebody, and his friends naturally always protest, and opposition always manifests itself, but on that system we have been going through this bill, and I do hope the House will stand by us and say this is a fair amendment. It is a little matter, of course; it is not worth while to spend much time on it, but we have done what we thought was right, and I have not heard any argument or reason advanced which has shaken my opinion, and I do hope the House will support our amendment.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman from Ohio has said that he understood these messengers performed no private services for the judges. Perhaps that ought to be corrected just to a slight extent. The judges of the District of Columbia are guilty of the unreasoning extravagance of eating a little lunch generally in the short recess which they take every day, and these messengers do sometimes go outside and bring their lunches to them. This might be said to be a quasi private service from the squeamish view point of certain very excellent gentlemen. I rather think myself the price of their lunch and character of it ought to have been looked into and perhaps scrutinized a little more carefully than it has been, and the expenditure of it curtailed by regulation of law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts made the statement that these courts were provided with bailiffs. There is no provision in the bill for bailiffs.

Mr. MUDD. I do not know as to that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland know?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like the information.

Mr. MUDD. I really do not know. There is nothing of that kind in this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are no bailiffs in these courts. These are the only officers they have. They leave the court without anybody.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman from Maryland must decline to yield any further out of this allowance of five minutes. Now, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, suppose they had bailiffs, and I do not believe they do have them, I submit there would be nothing unreasonable or unpardonable if they should have bailiffs and messengers. I know that every court, or most all of the courts, in our not extravagant State of Maryland has bailiffs, criers, and messengers. These messengers keep each individual judge's room in order. They arrange his papers, not his private papers, but papers which come before him for use by him in his court. They look after his opinions. They look after any papers he may leave in his room. They go to his court room to get papers for him to look over, and I would not be surprised if sometime one of these messengers was guilty of actually carrying papers to the judge's house for him to look over there, and to pore over and study for his next day's work in court. Each messenger looks after each judge's room, as I understand, and I apprehend a little looking after a judge's room, a little tidiness and cleanliness in the room of the judge will not be altogether obnoxious in the eyes of this District of Columbia Appropriation Committee.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman wish to convey the idea to the committee there are no bailiffs?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know as to that, but I do not believe that they have.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. And that the messengers are the only employees of the court?

Mr. MUDD. I did not so state.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is my understanding of the case.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Could not one messenger take care of two rooms?

Mr. MUDD. I will answer the question. Perhaps he could take care of two rooms, but suppose the judges are on the bench. These judges, you understand, are most days sitting in six different rooms, carrying on trials with six different sets of officers of court. What would you do in case all or nearly all of these judges should want some information of the law—some information out of the books—at the same time? Would you ask a lawyer before one of the courts to go outside and ask a messenger to come over there, or would the judge have to get down from the bench and engage in a sprinting stunt across or along the corridors to get a colored messenger to go somewhere to get or do something? Nobody wants to see that. Mr. Chairman, we all admire and seriously appreciate the economy which this great committee proposes, but this is not economy, this is parsimony, and if I might coin a word I should say it is a "picayunity."

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MUDD. I want two minutes more, in order to get information from the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. I can relieve the apparent distress of the gentleman by saying to him that each of these courts is provided with three bailiffs and one crier.

Mr. MUDD. The function of a bailiff is not that of a messenger, and the function of a crier is not that of a messenger, and I assume that the gentleman from Texas knows the difference between them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Show me one of them.

Mr. BURLESON. In the sundry civil bill, where it ought to be.

Mr. MUDD. When it comes to that, if the gentleman's stroke of economy lasts, he can move to strike out bailiffs from the sundry civil bill. I suggest that gentlemen do their duty here as they ought to do it in the District of Columbia appropriation bill in matters making provision for the courts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. With the permission of the gentleman, I will say that we have reached the point where we must have a flunky standing at the elbow of every official. We are inveighed against and criticised——

Mr. MUDD. Under your present policy you save at the spigot and turn loose at the bunghole. That is the character of economy we seem to be getting in this bill.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a great deal of undue and unnecessary excitement in regard to this amendment that has been offered by me. I think for the House of Representatives of the United States to engage in such petty cheeseparing as to decline to allow a judge to have a personal messenger or attendant to do the errands he must necessarily have done while he is sitting upon the bench is contemptible to a degree.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like the gentleman to state to the House whether in any courts of record in any State in the Union the judges are allowed messengers in addition to the bailiffs.

Mr. OLCOTT. I know of absolutely none in the State of New York, from the highest to the lowest, where they are not allowed. I have never known a court in the State of New York where the judges do not have a separate messenger.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman from New York will permit, I would like to suggest that in the interest of economy the several messengers in the Supreme Court ought to be cut off, because there are a number of judges sitting there together, and one messenger might do it all.

Mr. OLCOTT. There is only one other thing I want to say in regard to this matter. We have been endeavoring to find out where the information came from. I do not exactly know who Mr. Robison is, but I presume that the committee can inform me. He was asked about these messengers, as follows:

Mr. BURLESON. Could not two messengers serve the judges?

Mr. ROBISON. They think not.

Mr. BURLESON. But, as a matter of fact, could they not; what messenger service do they render?

Mr. ROBISON. They run back and forth from the courts to the bar association for books when the court is in session, and the judges seem to send them around a good deal with messages.

And I want to say that one of the members of the committee asked this most insulting question:

What do they do? Do they wait on the doors of the judges' house after the court is over?

I received letters from several of the judges, and I really think in this case we can afford to take the risk of the word of these gentlemen who are supreme court District judges rather than the word of anyone else. I hope my amendment will pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some gentlemen seem unduly excited because the Committee on Appropriations has uncovered some unnecessary employees in the District of Columbia and cut them off the pay roll. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has demonstrated his utter lack of knowledge of the provisions of this bill. He made the broad assertion that the District Committee was lavish in creating new places. One of the great objection Members are making to this bill is not that the committee has been lavish in the creation of new places, but that it has relentlessly applied the knife wherever it has found unnecessary employees. It is a beautiful spectacle to find the judges of this eminent court coming around this Capitol begging and beseeching Members to protect them in their petty patronage. They have bailiffs, they have criers, they have personal stenographers that they have not told the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] about, and if he would go into one of these courts he would fall over the unnecessary employees that are to be found there. I assert now that, if it would utterly cripple these courts to cut off four messengers, it is time to change the personnel of the judges occupying places on the bench. If these men are so infirm and so inefficient, and their bailiffs and criers and stenographers are so ineffective, then we had better change the entire personnel of the courts. The Committee on Appropriations or the members of the subcommittee——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman makes the statement that the judges have personal stenographers. Now, does the gentleman mean that they have a personal stenographer in addition to the stenographer who reports the proceedings of the court? Is that the stenographer that he refers to as a personal stenographer?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my understanding, that they have personal clerks, and that information is furnished by a gentleman who knows whereof he speaks. These employees are not carried in this bill; they are carried in another appropriation bill; and the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, who is familiar with these matters, informed the committee that these employees are upon the pay roll; and yet gentlemen get up here and say, because we have found these eminent gentlemen followed around town as if by pets, with attendants carrying their coats and hats and bringing in lunch, that because we have taken them off the pay roll that we have crippled—crippled!—the courts of the District! For one I believe that these messengers are unnecessary, and believing that, Mr. Chairman, I voted to cut four of them out of the bill, and if I had an opportunity I would vote to eliminate the seven, and I know the courts would not be impaired, but they would to do their work just as efficiently; and perhaps the judges, getting some needed exercise, might have sounder minds in sounder bodies.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I move that all debate on this clause and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at the attack that we have just listened to by a member of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the courts of this District. If I had any such views as the gentleman has professed, I would want to abolish the courts, and would be inclined do it to-morrow. Now, these gentlemen have had messengers in those courts for years, ever since the adoption of the code; I think ever since the formation of the courts. I know of no court of the status of those here, and their standing, where the judges do not have messengers. It seems to me when these judges state that they need a messenger that their word ought to be taken here. If we can not take their word in regard to such a little matter as that, then it must be a sorry case with the people of the District who have to practice before that kind of a court. I think it is a contemptible thing to attack courts of the standing of these courts here and assert that a judge has a messenger or anybody following him about like a dog, as one of the members did. I trust the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that that criticism is any worse than the criticism of a court by the President in a message?

Mr. WALDO. That is not my estimate. On the contrary, I have no such estimate of the courts of this District and the courts of the country. If we had such judges in this District, why, we should get rid of them and have somebody else. Now, I trust that this amendment will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALDO. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 31.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from New York, changing the total, will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the District appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCKINLAY of California, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5357. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River above the village of Monticello, Wright County, Minn.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5683. An act to provide for the removal of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4250, with a House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate bill with a House amendment disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4250) conferring enlarged powers and authority on the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and to impose further duties thereon.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know what motion is pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not submitted a motion.

Mr. WANGER. The motion is that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That the House insist on its amendment, and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is that a matter of privilege, or does it take unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair it is a matter of privilege——

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the inquiry.

The SPEAKER (continuing). The stage of disagreement having been reached; otherwise the Chair would, instead of laying it before the House from the Speaker's table, have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I wanted to know, Mr. Speaker. I am perfectly willing to take the opinion of the Chair upon the matter. Of course, I would have to take it, but I am perfectly content to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not in the Chair's mind at the time he made the remark.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely wanted to inquire.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered to the best of his ability.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly content, Mr. Speaker, with the Chair's answer.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. WANGER, and Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Attorney-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for construction of a new building at the Reform School, District of Columbia—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for Coast and Geodetic Survey—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12610) to authorize the United States Government to participate in the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on the shores of Hampton Roads, in Norfolk County, Va., in the year 1907, and to appropriate money in aid thereof, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3389); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14897) providing for the temporary maintenance of the Long Bridge over the Potomac River, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3390); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KLINE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16730) to prevent the unauthorized wearing or use of badges, name, titles of offices, insignia, ritual, or ceremonies of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3392); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17411) for the resurvey of certain townships in the State of Nebraska, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3393); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MEYER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17663) to extend the provisions of the act of March 3, 1901, to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps advanced at any time under the provisions of sections 1505 and 1605 for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3394); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MORRELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bills of the House H. R. 347, 8472, 9729, 9738, 11641, 12590, and 12591, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 18442) to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3395); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 21, 1906.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following prayer:

Let us now praise famous men and our fathers that begot us. The Lord hath wrought great glory by them through his great power from the beginning. Leaders of the people by their counsels and by their knowledge of learning meet for the people, wise and eloquent in their instructions.

Let us pray.

Father, we thank Thee for the fathers who founded this nation, and we thank Thee for those who went before the fathers who founded the colonies and made these States, for the men who knew God and believed in God, and planted their State on the everlasting foundations, who knew no king but the King of kings, and no Lord but the Lord of lords. We thank Thee that such men and their children live to-day, that they are with Thee in bringing in Thy kingdom, and we ask Thee that the spirit that was in the fathers may be with us to-day, even in our calamities; that we may bear calamity as the children of the living God; in our prosperity that we may give Thee the praise and not take it for ourselves.

Be with the Congress, Father. Be with all the States. Be with the President. Be with all the nations, to bind all men together in one. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the cablegram of the vice-president of the Brazilian Senate to the Vice-President of the United States and President of the United States Senate, expressing the sympathy of that body for the people of San Francisco and other communities in California overtaken by a great catastrophe, will be appreciated by the people of my afflicted State; and while voicing the sentiments of the Senate of the United States, I desire also to make in their behalf heartfelt acknowledgment.

I must also take this opportunity to acknowledge the great debt of gratitude due to the Government of the United States for the large sums of money contributed in aid of sufferers and the splendidly efficient manner in which the different departments are carrying on their work of relief; and to the people of the different States and cities of the Union who have contributed millions upon millions of dollars to assist the homeless, the hungry, and the suffering. I desire to say that California will never be able to express adequately its deep appreciation.

Mr. President, in this same connection I want to thank the great railroads of this country for the prompt and cheerful manner in which they have given precedence to supplies of all kinds that are being forwarded to the suffering people of my State.

They have given precedence over all other business in order to forward promptly the succor to the distressed. The two great railroads entering my home city are carrying free the homeless and destitute to other parts of the country, where they can receive food and shelter.

Great disasters like that which has occurred on the Pacific coast bring out most strongly the fact that the different peoples of this world are after all one in human sympathy, and that the differences of race and language are external only, which are swept away by calamity, bringing out clearly the ultimate fact that all men are brothers, whatever portion of the globe they inhabit. As kindness and consideration are vastly helpful to the individual overwhelmed by a great loss, so will the expressions of brotherly sympathy from the different nations of the earth help my afflicted State to bear more easily her great burden of sorrow.

I believe that our stricken city will recover from the blow with wonderful rapidity, and will justify the design of its official seal, which bears a phenix issuring, new born, from the flames, with the motto, "Oro en paz, ferro en guerra," which translated means "Gold in peace, iron in war." In her present war with the elements San Francisco will show her mettle, and will surely rise again and continue to be the great metropolis of the Pacific Coast States.

Mr. President, I move that the Vice-President of the United States and President of the United States Senate make to the Senate of the Brazilian Government proper acknowledgment of the cablegram received and laid before the Senate yesterday evening.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of John M. Kairies, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., praying that an investigation be made of the losses sustained by him through his having been expelled from Russia by order of the Russian Emperor; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of F. E. Garner, of Union, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation to require manufacturers and shippers of foods for interstate shipment to label their foods and print the ingredients contained in them on each package thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Kishwaukee Lodge, No. 310, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Belvidere, Ill., and a petition of Aurora Division, No. 32, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Aurora, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called "employers' liability bill;" which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Wolfeboro National Bank, of Wolfeboro, N. H., and a petition of the Hubbard & Moffitt Commission Company, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the adoption of a certain amendment to the present bankruptcy law; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the New Hampshire State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Peterboro, and of sundry citizens of Keene and Whitefield, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Mrs. John A. Logan, of the Department of the District of Columbia, United Spanish War Veterans; of the Woman's Relief Corps, Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, all of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase of a temporary home in the District of Columbia for ex soldiers and sailors of the late wars; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 5th instant, proposing to appropriate $2,000 for the salary of a chief clerk of the Bureau of Manufactures, Department of Commerce and Labor, and also to provide for additional clerks for that Bureau, intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5794) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a commission to consider and recommend a system of national parks for military, historical, and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 5795) for the relief of Francis M. Sheppard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5796) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-road; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 5797) granting a pension to Martha A. Wright; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5798) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hunsley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 5799) to establish the true status of the Nebraska Territorial Militia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5800) granting an increase of pension to James N. Davis; and

A bill (S. 5801) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Jackson Parris.

TARIFFS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500 for the collating and arranging of the tariffs of foreign countries in form for distribution, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA FALLS.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate in regard to the preservation of Niagara Falls be printed as a Senate document.

JUDICIAL REVIEW REGARDING RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a very brief article appeared in the Washington Post of yesterday containing a summary of the different views expressed by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of rate review. It is a very valuable and a brief compilation. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document, and that it also be placed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that a certain compilation from the Washington Post of yesterday be printed as a document and also in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the subject of the compilation is not in the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has been reported to the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. It is entirely selected from the testimony, but will save a great deal of time in the matter of reference.

Mr. SCOTT. It is brief.

Mr. LODGE. It is brief. It comprises only two columns. It takes out certain extracts from the testimony and places them in a form which will be very convenient for reference.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt of that. I do not object to the request.

Mr. LODGE. It is all in the testimony.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to know that it was taken from the testimony.

Mr. MONEY. I ask if the matter the Senator from Massachusetts has introduced and asked to have printed has been referred to the Committee on Printing for an estimate of the cost?

Mr. LODGE. It does not have to be estimated for. It does not cost anything like the amount allowed by the rule. It comprises only a couple of columns, and the cost will be far inside the limit. It would not cost $10 to print it as a document.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I am not trying to play economist. I have no doubt the Senator from Massachusetts knows very well what he is doing, and I have no doubt that it is what I approve; but I asked for some printing here of a most valuable character, which was rejected because it would cost something. It always costs something to print.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BROAD RATE REVIEW—OPINIONS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSIONERS—WHAT THEIR BILL PROVIDES—OFFICIAL RECOMMENDATIONS TO CONGRESS AND INDIVIDUAL EXPRESSIONS OF OPINION BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE CLEARLY DEFINE ATTITUDE OF MEMBERS OF COMMISSION ON SUBJECT OF JUDICIAL REVIEW.

An advocate of broad court review, broad enough to protect all parties in interest, referring to the alleged controversy in the Democratic conference in regard to it, called attention yesterday to a line of highly pertinent evidence upon the subject which seems to have been overlooked in the argument.

An interesting fact that apparently has been lost sight of in the Senate debate on the character of the judicial-review provision to be inserted in the Hepburn bill is that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, both collectively and individually, are on record as favoring the broadest judicial review, without any limitation on the right of the courts to grant preliminary injunctions. As a matter of fact, the members of the Commission, although they have at times been charged with seeking undue power, have never sought to have conferred upon them the despotic and autocratic authority over the transportation business and commerce of the country that some of the proposed amendments to the Hepburn bill seek to confer upon them.

The act to regulate commerce, constituting the Commission, specifically requires it to make such recommendations as to additional legislation as it may deem necessary, and the Commission has never failed to carry out this requirement.

NEVER SUGGESTED ABRIDGMENT.

In all of its recommendations in favor of legislation conferring the rate-making power, however, it has never suggested that the power of the courts to review its orders should be abridged in any way. On the contrary, its suggestions as to legislation, whenever put into concrete form, as in the bill prepared at the beginning of this session, and as voiced by the individual members of the Commission before Congressional committees, have contemplated the exercise by the courts of broad powers of review without any restriction upon the right of a reviewing court to issue preliminary injunctions or any other orders ordinarily employed by the courts. It might be expected that the recommendations of these men, who are devoting all of their time to the study of transportation problems and of the best means of correcting abuses, especially when those recommendations relate to the powers to be exercised by them, would have great weight with Congress. Especially might it be expected that the legislative branch of the Government, always jealous of encroachments on the part of the executive, might be reluctant to confer upon administrative officials, responsible only to the President of the United States, a large measure of legislative power without surrounding such grant of authority with every possible safeguard and restriction. It is scarcely to be expected that Congress will deliberately go further in the direction of conferring autocratic powers on administrative officials than those officials themselves have recommended.

THE COMMISSIONERS' BILL.

The latest and most specific recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners is contained in their draft of a bill submitted to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce at the beginning of the present session of Congress. In that bill they ask Congress to provide that "any carrier may, within thirty days from the service upon it of any order, other than an order for the payment of money, begin in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which its principal operating office is situated, proceedings to set aside and vacate such order. * * * Such proceedings shall be begun by filing on the equity side of the court a petition or bill in equity, which shall briefly state the matters embraced in such order and the particulars in which it is alleged to be unlawful, and in such proceedings the complainant and the Commission shall be made defendants."

There is no suggestion here as to the limitation of the jurisdiction of the court in any way or of any restriction on the powers of the court to issue a preliminary injunction or any other order. Further, the bill proposes to provide explicitly that "upon the filing of such a petition the circuit court may, upon such notice to the complainant and to the Commission as the court deems proper, extend the time within which such order shall take effect, not to exceed in all sixty days from the date of service of the order upon the carrier." It also proposes to provide explicitly for the issuance of preliminary injunctions by the provision that "the court may also, if it plainly appears that the order is unlawful, and not otherwise, suspend the operation of the order during the pendency of the proceedings or until the further order of the court."

PROVISIONS AS TO FINES.

Under this bill it is only in the event that no proceedings are taken to vacate an order within thirty days or that such proceedings are not successful that it becomes a "final order." The bill proposes the same heavy fine of $5,000 for each offense for failure to put an order into effect and the same proceedings for the enforcement of an order, with the important difference that under the Commission bill the fine would not apply and the proceedings could not be commenced until the order had become "a final order" either by being acquiesced in by the carrier or by the failure of proceedings in the court to vacate it.

In the report of the Commission for 1904 legislation to empower the Commission to fix rates is recommended, and the Commission says that if its decision "is wrong—if it would deprive the carrier of property without due process of law or evade any of its other rights or privileges under the Constitution or laws of the United States—its operation could be enjoined upon showing to that effect by the carrier in a suitable and summary proceeding in the Federal court." There is no suggestion here that the courts should be restricted to the protection of the carrier in its constitutional rights, but the suggestion is for the broadest possible review, for the protection of the carrier in every right to which it might be entitled, and for a summary injunction for the protection of those rights.

Not only collectively, but individually, the members of the Commission have frequently gone on record in favor of broad judicial review, and of the exercise by the courts of the power of preliminary injunction.

CHAIRMAN KNAPP'S VIEWS.

Chairman Knapp, when he was before the Senate committee last spring, thought that the inquiry of the court of review ought not to be confined to the question of the reasonableness and lawfulness of the new rate ordered by the Commission, but ought to extend to the question of whether the Commission had erred in its condemnation of the original rate. In reply to a question by Senator CLAPP, he said: "I anticipate that when a decision of the Commission is taken to court, under any scheme that you are considering, the vital question will be, Was the Commission right in its condemnation of the rate complained of?" Again he said: "The carrier which is unwilling to accept the adjudication and order of the Commission, and wishes to review that, should have the right to review the condemnation of the rate complained of as well as the rate put in substitution. It seems to me that is within the range of justice."

COMMISSIONER PROUTY HEARD.

Commissioner Prouty, than whom there has been no more zealous advocate of extending the powers of the Commission, in his testimony before the Senate committee said: "I have never advocated the exercise of that power (the power to make rates) by the Commission without the right of review." Farther on, speaking of the character of review, he said: "It seems to me that a court should presume in favor of a rate exactly what it presumes in favor of a statute. It should presume it is reasonable; but if it clearly appears to be unreasonable, it should set it aside, and should do that although the railroad is making 100 per cent on its investment. From what I have seen of the operation of this right under the fourteenth amendment and the acts of State commissions, I have felt that it did not afford to the railroad the full measure of protection which it deserved, and I have advocated the creation of a special court, which should be an expert court, upon the theory that the court may exercise, if it were given the power to review the lawfulness of a rate, some additional power to what it could exercise under the fourteenth amendment."

Mr. Prouty indicated that he would shrink from the responsibility of exercising the rate-making power under a law that did not provide for a broad judicial review, saying: "You may take any three judges in this land, I do not care who they are, and let them hear these questions from one year's end to the other, let them become familiar with every condition which surrounds the railway transportation of this country, and I will, as an Interstate Commerce Commissioner, prefer to be reviewed by a body of that sort than to have the absolute power to make the rates without review, because I am conscious of the fact that I might make mistakes, and I think I might sometimes decide in favor of the public in that case where I would not in the other." Aside from the question of policy, Mr. Prouty did not believe that Congress could take away from the courts the right to suspend temporarily the enforcement of an order. In reply to a question by Senator CULLOM, as to whether he would have the rate take effect immediately, he said: "I do not think you can say anything about that. I think the court has an absolute right to decide and suspend any rate which any commission may make, and that you can not help it. * * * It seems to me that a rate ought to stand in abeyance long enough to permit a railroad company to take any steps it wanted to take."

WHAT COMMISSIONER FIFER SAID.

Commissioner Fifer indicated that he was in harmony with his colleagues on this subject, though he barely touched on it. In discussing the question of how long an order made by the Commission should remain in effect, he said: "I think if you pass a law giving the Commission the right to condemn a rate when it is challenged, and the right to say what a reasonable rate is and put it into operation, and then fix a time when it shall go out, unless it is reviewed and reversed by some court—I would not cut that off—I think that would be sufficient elasticity."

Commissioner Clements, when he was before the House committee, said he did not see any reason why the exercise of the rate-making power by the Commission should not be subject "to any judicial review that is possible to be had under constitutional and legal methods." He can see no reason for any limitation whatever on the power of review, but would subject the Commission to "any judicial review that is possible to be had." No one in the Senate proposes to go further than this.

COMMISSIONER COCKRELL EXPLICIT.

Commissioner Cockrell, whose views might be expected to have even more weight with his former colleagues in the Senate that those of the other Commissioners, was very explicit in his advocacy of the broadest kind of judicial review. When he was before the Senate committee he said: "I would authorize the railroads, after the lapse of a reasonable time from the decision and order of the Commission, to go into the existing courts of the United States, if they desired to contest the ratings found by the Commission. The burden of proof would be on them to show that the rate fixed by the Commission was not a reasonable and just rate, and in that case the court would have full jurisdiction to determine whether the rate first established by the railroads and declared to be unreasonable by the Commission was an unreasonable or unjust rate.

"The court would likewise have the authority to say whether the rate fixed by the Commission was a reasonable and just rate, and the court might decide, and, in my judgment, the court would be compelled to decide the question." Further on he said: "If the rate fixed by the Commission was such a rate as would result in great and speedy harm to them (the carriers involved), they could get out an injunction. You must remember that they have twenty or thirty days before the rate goes into effect after it has been ordered by the Commission. Now, they have that time within which to get out an injunction, and if it was a case where they would have no remedy and they had collected the small rate and could not collect the other, and they should show clearly that what the Commission had done was an irreparable wrong, the court would suspend it until the court could hear the question."

HEPBURN BILL FIRST TO DENY IT.

These quotations from members of the Commission might be still further extended and the testimony of other advocates of giving the Commission rate-making power might be cited to show that until the Hepburn bill was brought forward the idea of narrowing the judicial review of orders of the Commission and of denying to the courts the right of suspension pending review had not been seriously advocated.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 4599. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Wakeland Heryford, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR ORVILLE H. PLATT.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, some weeks ago I gave notice that after the close of the routine morning business this day I would ask the Senate to consider resolutions in regard to the life, character, and public service of my former colleague, Hon. ORVILLE H. PLATT. I send the resolutions to the desk and ask that they may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Connecticut.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT, late a Senator from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, since the close of the last session of the Congress Connecticut has been deprived by death of the service of its distinguished citizen and Senator, ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT, whose life, character, and public service we here recognize, and this day commemorate. For five consecutive terms he had been chosen with rare unanimity to represent his native State in this great legislative body.

Senator PLATT was a profound student of colonial history, especially as connected with the Connecticut colony and State; an enthusiastic admirer of the exalted type and high character of the men that were instrumental in its early settlement and development, and a loyal devotee of the representative form of government which they conceived and established. He was a firm believer in the inspiring and godly faith which led them, without love of adventure or hope of worldly gain, to sever the ties of home and country and family, and to seek in a new and unknown land an abiding place where they might worship their God in their own way and according to the dictates of their own conscience.

"Small time had they then for the mere ideal;
Their love was truth, their present life all real.
They walked the world, faith's vision never dim;
Saw not God's works, they only gazed on Him."

These men, Pilgrim and Puritan alike, were well equipped for the Master's work which they had undertaken and to which they had devoted their lives. Their religious enthusiasm and their unbounded faith inspired them with undaunted courage to struggle with privations and adversities, to conquer the wilderness and the treacherous foes with whom they were surrounded and constantly contending in their new settlements The love of liberty, strengthened by the remembrance of the tyranny from which they had escaped, actuated them to conceive and inaugurate a government of the people, so beneficial in its character, so ideal in its simple mechanism, so perfect in workings that it has been handed down from generation to generation, modified in its organization, but its principles and its integrity preserved.

The compact signed in the cabin of the Mayflower, followed by the written constitution framed by the founders of the Connecticut colony, and confirmed by royal charter, was the foundation of written constitutional government throughout the world, and under these governmental concessions Connecticut, both as a Colony and a State, lived for nearly two centuries.

The religious element in these new-founded settlements for a long time naturally predominated in public as well as in churchly affairs; church and state were closely allied throughout the formulative period of colonial life, and the influence of the pastors was almost unlimited; they were the teachers as well as the ministers, supervised the educational privileges of their several communities—simple though they were in the early days—and frequently filled the place of the good physician and counselor.

The meetinghouse was the active center of the community life. Within its doors all public interests were discussed and action determined. It was often used as a place of refuge for protection and defense, and on the Sabbath for a place of worship; the meetinghouse and the schoolhouse grew up side by side, and over both the pastor ordinarily presided.

Of the men of the times of which I have spoken it is appropriately written on a memorial tablet erected to commemorate the lives of the first settlers of one of our ancient Connecticut towns, among whom were numbered Richard Platt and Mary, his devoted wife, the ancestral heads of the family in America:

"God sifted a whole nation that he might send choice grain into the wilderness."

Men of such character and abilities, founding such institutions as they established, religious, governmental, and educational, could not fail to leave the impress of their lives upon their own times and upon the generations of men that were to follow them. I venture the thought that from the colonial life and works of these men our great Senator gathered the inspiration and power which controlled his own long and useful life. In an impressive historical address, delivered on the occasion of the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of the first church of the town in which he lived, having in mind the early days and their influence upon the present, he spoke these words:

"There is one word in our language of wonderful significance, which no definition that has been written completely expresses; that is 'influence.' I like to believe, and do believe, that no good deed was ever done, no good word was ever fitly spoken by any human being that is not to-day a living force and power in the world; that the world is what it is because of the deeds done and the words spoken by those who have gone before, not only by the remembered great, but the humble, unremembered souls sleeping in unknown graves. If man is immortal, he as truly lives in the past as he will in the future. We bury the body, but the unbound spirit lives and labors. Thoughts are forces; words are agencies; deeds are power."

Of the life of the settler-immigrant and his immediate descendants written history gives but little record, but we find that Richard Platt, with his wife Mary, with their children, arrived from England and located in the New Haven colony. It is reasonable to assume that he was dissatisfied with governmental or religious conditions—in this colony they were closely united—for in 1639 he, with sixty others, organized a new church society and removed to and settled the town of Milford, where he lived throughout his life. It is well to remember that differences in doctrine and practice led generally to the formation of a new church society and eventually to the settlement of a new town, to which the disagreeing element would remove.

Richard Platt and his descendants were prominent factors in the communities in which they lived, served their fellows both in civil and church office, and were often honored with military rank in the local train-band. During the war of the Revolution father and son fought side by side in the Continental Army. At the close of the war John Platt settled in Washington, Conn., and here David Gould Platt, the father of the future Senator, was born, and in 1817 married Almyra Hitchcock.

Their home can be pictured as one common in Connecticut rural communities. I find its inmates described as "plain, unassuming, good farming people of the sturdy New England type, in whose home were fostered intelligence and piety." Another writes:

"I was at home in your father's house. He is one among the early abolitionists who is silhouetted on my memory most vividly. Your mother was a heroic soul—one in ten thousand."

Slavery had existed in Connecticut since early in the seventeenth century; unsuited to New England surroundings, it was gradually disappearing from the State; the antislavery sentiment was just beginning its struggles, and the home of Platt and his associates were the centers in which the leaders gathered to forward the cause in which they had enlisted. They were denounced from the pulpit, ostracised in society, and persecuted in their business; pupils were withdrawn from the academy on account of the views of its teacher until its numbers were so depleted that its doors were closed, and as a final punishment PLATT, the teacher Gunn, and those interested in the new movement withdrew or were dismissed from the church.

ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT was born July 19, 1827, in the town of Washington, Conn., in the home to which I have alluded. The traditions of the State, the lives and example of its founders of colonial and revolutionary times, the godly influence of the home life, and the daybreak of the awakened struggle for liberty were his priceless heritage.

His early education was in the primitive district school, from which he graduated to enter the academy, taught by his father's abolition friend, for instruction in the higher branches, and later became associated with Doctor Gunn as assistant. It was this close association as pupil and teacher with this courageous heroic spirit that gave the directing motive to and marked out his future career.

With the closing of the academy, Doctor Gunn, with his assistant, PLATT, removed to Towanda, Pa., the home of David Wilmot, the author of the Wilmot proviso, and where to be an abolitionist did not subject a man to obloquy, and reentered their work. After a few months PLATT returned to Connecticut, entered the law office of Gideon H. Hollister, at Litchfield, Conn., and in 1850 was admitted to practice. Returning to Towanda, he completed his legal studies in the office of the Hon. Ulysses S. Mercur, afterwards Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and was likewise admitted to practice in that State. While residing at Towanda, he was married to Miss Annie Bull, and who died in 1893. In April, 1897, he married Mrs. Jeannie P. Hoyt, née Smith, daughter of the Hon. Truman Smith, his early friend and adviser.

Retaining his love for his native State, he determined to again locate there and make it his future home, and, acting on the advice of his friend, Hon. Truman Smith, a member of the Senate, and whose successor he proved to be in later years, the young attorney selected one of the struggling industrial communities as a promising field for his future work, and made the then town of Meriden, Conn., his lifelong home. The professional life of the country attorney at this period failed to yield even a reasonable pecuniary reward, as clients were few and fees necessarily limited; but these conditions did not discourage the young lawyer; he had determined to be a master of his profession and to win his way to the confidence and support of his fellow-townsmen.

His leisure hours furnished ample time for study and to participate in the various interests of the developing town. He was known as a public-spirited citizen, and everything that pertained to the general welfare received his enthusiastic investigation and merited support. He was conspicuous in the organization of nearly every industrial corporation that came into existence; he perfected the charter, and set in motion the municipal government of the city of Meriden. He connected himself with the First Congregational Church and became interested in all its work. A pupil in his class in the Sunday school has written me:

"Oftentimes he would become so intensely interested in his subject that he would seem almost inspired."

Amid the hours of his busy life he found time to gratify his love of nature acquired in his boyhood days, and a tramp through the woods, or a day on the brook, or with his gun, gave him ample hours for recreation; and these pastimes were his delight through his life.

The educational interests of the town were his constant study, and to their broader and modern development he gave the benefit of his resourceful mind and enthusiastic support. In later years he gave expression to the success of the educational system that had been fostered in Connecticut in an address at the dedication of a free public library:

"We have been wont to glorify the common school as the foundation and means of our common growth. Our nation could never have been what it is to-day, nor what by faith we perceive to be its future, without its rare development of the educational spirit. Education in its widest sense is the corner stone of our national temple. The free public library is but the advanced common school. Its opportunity is not a privilege; it is a common right. True men and women continue to acquire knowledge while they live. When education is finished growth ceases, decay commences. The soul is dead that slumbers, the living is the only growing soul, and without books the soul would starve and die."

The moral atmosphere of the town felt the elevating influence of his personal life. He was an open and consistent adherent to the cause of temperance, which throughout his long life he never ceased actively to advocate and encourage, both in private, and in public legislation.

His political principles and party affiliations were already firmly established; his associations in his early home with the leaders of the antislavery agitation had inspired him with a love for his fellow-men and their inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness with which they were endowed. He recognized the effective power of principle as successfully exercised by the infant antislavery or liberty party in a Presidential campaign, its first appearance as a political factor. He had seen new territory acquired which gave fresh impetus to the struggle between freedom and slavery. In the Presidential election of 1848 he cast his first vote, and identified himself with the Free Soil Party and gave his influence and support to its candidates.

Gradually but surely the young attorney had succeeded in winning the confidence and respect of his fellow-townsmen, which was his chosen standard by which to measure the success of his work, and naturally he became a leader in the religious, business, and social life of the community.

Mr. PLATT was not an avowed candidate for public office, but, accepting a nomination in 1853, was for three successive terms chosen judge of probate, and in 1855 clerk of the Connecticut senate, and in 1857 secretary of state. He was prominent in the organization of the Republican party, and was closely associated with its leaders, and to its principles and purposes he was a devoted adherent the remainder of his life. Repeatedly selected to represent his town in the General Assembly of the State, serving in the Senate 1861–1862 and in the house of representatives 1864 and 1869, he was accorded the party leadership and as speaker and chairman of the Judiciary Committee conducted the legislation with conservatism and marked ability. Professional demands were now more requiring; his extensive law practice called for his constant personal supervision, and had for him greater attractions than public office, and for a time he declined to accept further political honors. In 1877 he was appointed to the responsible position of State Attorney for New Haven County, which office he held until his election as United States Senator in 1879.

Mr. PLATT was nominated and chosen Senator by the General Assembly of Connecticut January, 1879. One of the leading contestants for the position was his old-time abolition friend, Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, who two years later he welcomed as a Senator, and for twenty-four years they remained as colleagues in this body.

The results of the caucus came as a surprise to the people of Connecticut, but recognizing the abilities displayed in the service of the State by the newly elected Senator, justified the choice. The citizens of his home town, gratified at the new honors which had come to their fellow-townsman, joined regardless of faction or party in a remarkable demonstration of their admiration for the man. In response to the greetings of his townsmen, he announced the simple principle that would guide his action:

"Just now everything is new and seems unreal. I can scarcely appreciate the future. How I shall walk in the new part in which I am set time will show. I do know that I shall try to do right as I see the right."

And this rule was the magnetic needle that directed and marked out the course of his Senatorial career.

He took his seat at the extra session of the Congress, March 18, 1879, well equipped for the new obligations which had so unexpectedly been thrust upon him. Connecticut institutions in town and State organization were a school of political educational life; in the school district, church society, and town meeting the people were accustomed to discuss and to direct all local affairs and interests, and in the General Court of the colonial and the Assembly of modern times the representatives of the people fitted themselves for advanced legislative work in the council chambers of the nation.

He found as colleagues the master spirits of legislation of both Houses of Congress throughout the war period, who had been joined by the great military leaders, transferred from the field to the forum, to assist through peaceful legislation the great work of reconstruction, and to work out the intricate problem of the future of the Republic.

A generation nearly has passed; one by one the names that illumined the roll of the Senate have been eliminated, and to-day but three of its then members remain to respond to its roll call and participate in these memorial exercises.

Determined to be a master in his work, he entered upon it with the same enthusiasm and spirit that enabled him to win his way in his early professional career. Accepting an assignment upon the Committee on Patents, on which he remained as member and chairman for nearly the whole period of his Senatorial service, he was enabled to render material assistance to his inventive and ingenious constituency in perfecting and strengthening the laws which to them were of so great material interest and the groundwork of a large degree of their prosperity. As chairman and member of the Committee on Territories, he familiarized himself with the needs of the great developing sections of the country, and was an active participant in the legislation for the admission into the Union of the States of Montana, Washington, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, and Idaho. As chairman of the Committee on Cuban Relations, he formulated the initial work that carried the blessings of liberty to the oppressed, and in what is now known as the "Platt amendment," cemented friendly relations with the newborn Republic. He gave his best thought and untiring industry to all matters of legislation and gradually won his own place in the front rank. He had high ideals of the duties and responsibilities of governments, and in an earnest discussion of the currency question, involving, to his mind, the honor of the nation, uttered this sentiment:

"Governments, like individuals, have characters; and if there is any grander sight in this world to behold than the character of an upright, honest man, built up by acts of integrity and honesty and uprightness, it is the character of a government built up from its beginning by acts of integrity and honor and honesty, with no blot on its record; and if there is anything sadder in this world than to see a man who has achieved such a character throw it to the winds by a single dishonorable act, it is to see a great government that has built up a name for honesty, integrity, and nobility of character throw it to the winds by a single dishonorable act. God grant that that blot may never be put upon the character of our Government."

Senator PLATT was not a great orator. I would rather liken him to and recall him as the Roger Sherman of our own times, as I find Sherman described in a glowing history of the Continental Congress:

"No man surpassed him in capacity, influence, and strength. He was neither eloquent nor impassioned. As of St. Paul, it might have been said of him, 'his speech' was 'of no account,' and yet, like St. Paul, his words carried weight far surpassing those of the mere orator—words that will guide and inspire mankind to the latest time.

"There was in him kind-heartedness and industry, penetration and close reasoning, an unclouded intellect, superiority to passion, intrepid patriotism, solid judgment, and a directness which went straight to the end.

"He lacked magnetism, but though he did not possess genius, he had gift of accomplishment, which is greater than genius. He never trumpeted his own praises. He seemed to be indifferent to the applause of his fellows, and to have never thought that his own work entitled him to credit or praise. One act done, he proceeded quietly to the doing of another. Common sense, integrity, lofty purpose, unfaltering persistence, supplemented by wide knowledge and intense patriotism, seem to have been his distinguishing traits. He took up his life as a humble (shoemaker) attorney; he laid it down as (our) Connecticut's national lawgiver."

His confidence in the great mass of the people to maintain our representative form of government was absolute. He appreciated the sacrifices which the fathers endured to establish and the enthusiasm with which their descendants rallied to preserve and perpetuate its blessings. In his own words:

"Liberty meant in Revolutionary days, as it means now, all that men hope for, either for themselves or for posterity, and the self-governed state meant an enjoyment of all the blessings of liberty. Remember, too, that in all ages lines of human liberty have been advanced by the poor and lowly."

The Senator's presence and participation on public and historical occasions was eagerly sought, and to such requests he willingly acceded so far as his official duties and strength would permit. His addresses were word pictures and realistic delineations of the historic men and their times and the heroic acts and generous lives of the founders and patriots of colonial and revolutionary days, the influence of whose life and acts, he felt, was ever inspiring.

The dignity of his presence always gave an added interest to the gatherings of the people, the earnestness of his manner commanded the close attention of his hearers, and the moral lessons which he never failed to inculcate, and the influence of a godly Christian character, which he deemed so essential to the welfare of society and for which his own personal life was so conspicuous, furnished ample food for thought and reflection.

The people of Connecticut never failed in their confidence or loyalty to their Senator. His whole public life of untiring industry, sterling integrity, and devotion to duty realized their expectations when they selected him from their own ranks to represent them in the council chamber of the nation, and confirmed his own declaration at the outset of his Senatorial life—

"I shall try to do right as I see the right."

Senator PLATT rounded out his service in this body as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, of which he had previously been a member, and as your presiding officer on one of those rare occasions in the history of our country that this Senate has been called upon to exercise its constitutional judicial functions. His work of accomplishment ended with the Fifty-eighth Congress and the short executive session that followed. He closed his great career with an unsullied record and reputation, the peer of the honored Connecticut Senators, Ellsworth, Sherman, Johnson, Trumbull, Buckingham, and others that preceded him.

His last public act was to participate in the legislative memorial exercises at the State capitol, in Hartford, in memory of his long-time friend and colleague; friends when—

"creeds could not bind the consciences of such men. They found a law higher than creeds; they inquired only their duty to God and man, and did their duty as the saw it."

His none too rugged frame had wearied in its work, the throbbing heart pulse was to him the prophetic warning of a near reunion and renewed activities in the life beyond, as he depicted in loving, tender words his graceful tribute to the life and character of Connecticut's idol soldier and statesman that had already entered into the new life; it was a "good-by" and not a farewell.

The needed rest and recreation he sought in his home in his native town, "little Washington," as he would designate it, but the coveted rest never came until "he slept with the fathers."

He had honorably filled his own place both in private and public life, and left behind an imperishable name to illumine the annals of his State and nation. He had fought the good fight and kept the faith; with an unclouded mind, with a characteristic faith, and an undimmed eye he had seen in an awakening vision—

"An angel, writing in a book of gold;
Exceeding peace had made him (Ben Adhem) bold.
And to the presence in his room he said,
'What writest thou?' The vision raised its head
And with a look made all of sweet accord
Answer'd: 'The names of those who love the Lord.'
'And is mine one?' said he. (Adhem.) 'Nay, not so,'
Replied the angel. He spoke more low,
But cheerily still, and said: 'I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men.'
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again, with a great wakening light,
And show'd the names whom love of God had bless'd,
And lo! his (Ben Adhem's) name led all the rest."

He fell asleep.
April twenty-first, nineteen hundred and five,
Washington, Connecticut.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I esteem it a great privilege to be permitted to pay a brief tribute to the life and character of the late Senator ORVILLE H. PLATT, who died one year ago to-day at his home in Connecticut, where his birth took place seventy-eight years before. I regret that my own occupation in matters of pressing public duty has prevented me from making suitable preparation to speak in fitting terms of his life and public services, but the portraiture of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] has so well delineated the character of our late colleague that it seems almost unnecessary for me to speak of any special trait.

Senator PLATT came here on the 18th day of March, 1879, and at that desk took the oath of office. He served until within a few days of the time of his death, including the entire extraordinary session of the Senate which convened on March 4, 1905. I was present when that oath was taken and served with Senator PLATT during the twenty-six years of his service here. It goes without saying that Senators who serve here for a long period of time come to know each other well; and it was my fortune to know Senator PLATT intimately and to love him for his many beautiful traits of character.

I shall not speak of what he did or what he was before he entered this Chamber; this story has been graphically portrayed by the senior Senator from Connecticut to-day. I shall, in a brief way, undertake to speak of his services here and the work he did here and the just fame he acquired here.

Whilst there may have been others more brilliant and more eloquent in speech, no Senator during his term performed a larger measure of service in this body than did Senator PLATT. I think the instances are rare in our history at any time where any Senator has served more faithfully, industriously, effectively, or more to the advantage of his State and his country.

I am not surprised that, in reply to his fellow-townsmen at Meriden, he should have said, as just quoted, that he was about to enter upon his service in this body with distrust of his own ability to discharge the new duties imposed upon him. I can understand how one would so feel who had never before served in either House of Congress; but his pledge then given to his fellow-townsmen, that he would try to do the right as he saw the right, was fully redeemed in his twenty-six years of service here.

It has been the rule in the Senate, with few exceptions from the foundation of the Government, that seniority in service shall govern in the selection of committees. So that, as has been truly said by the Senator from Connecticut, when Senator PLATT came here he found the positions on the most important committees already taken by Senators who by reason of their long service had become prominent in this body and in a greater or lesser degree prominent in the country, so that in his first term of service conditions required that he should take positions on minor committees.

During the early years of his service he was appointed on the two important committees of Territories and Patents, and he served on the Committee on Territories for twelve years continuously, and in 1887 became chairman of the committee. This committee had important work to do during the whole period of his service, and especially important during the years of his chairmanship. In 1889 four new States were brought into the Union under the leadership of Senator PLATT, namely, North and South Dakota—the old Territory of Dakota being divided in order to make two States—and Montana and Washington. During the following year, under his guidance as chairman, Idaho and Wyoming were also admitted. He had broad views on the subject of the admission of new States, believing that this great northwest country, then being rapidly developed through railroad extensions, would become an important portion of our Union as respects its agricultural, industrial, and mineral development. So that under his influence and guidance twelve additional Senators were admitted here. This expectation has already been abundantly realized by the rapid progress and development of those States since their admission.

During his service on the Committee on Patents he brought forward and secured the passage of important measures affecting the interests of inventors, and also secured a radical and needed reform of our copyright laws. In the discussion of the questions involved in these measures he displayed full and complete knowledge of the history of our copyright laws and the necessity for their improvement. His work in revising these patent laws, as well as his achievement in securing, during his chairmanship of the Committee on Territories, the admission of the six States I have named, merits for him high distinction in the annals of the Senate.

It is well known to Senators, though not apparent often to the general public, that there is a large amount of what might be called "drudgery work" necessary to be done in the committees and in the Senate, which is very important but not of such general public interest as to attract the attention of the country. This work must be done by those competent and faithful in the discharge of their public duties.

When the committees of the Senate were reorganized in 1887 Senator PLATT was, rather against his will, as I remember very well, persuaded to take a place upon the Committee on Indian Affairs—a hard-working committee with most important duties to perform affecting the Indian tribes and Indian reservations. At each succeeding Congress, though anxious to retire from the committee, because its work was exacting and difficult in connection with other committee assignments, but the importance of the work was so great, and his great ability was so recognized in its performance, that he was persuaded to continue in this important service for sixteen years, and was relied upon to prepare and formulate important legislation relating to these affairs.

He gave his attention to proposed legislation coming before that committee with absolute fidelity, care, and industry. The most important legislation was necessary during the most of this period, affecting the relations of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory to each other and to the Government. To this subject Senator PLATT gave unremitting attention and consideration, visiting the Territory on two different occasions with subcommittees. During one of these vacations nearly the whole summer was occupied in the work of preparation of a bill relating to the Five Civilized Tribes, which became a law and is the basis of the final settlement of the relations of these tribes to the Government. These questions were of the utmost importance, requiring the best ability to solve. His whole service of sixteen years was arduous and freely given, though not an attractive one.

But the most signal service in Senator PLATT's career here was performed in three committee rooms—those of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Finance, and the Committee on Cuban Relations. Nothing better illustrates the value of Senator PLATT's labors here than the fact that he was selected to deal with the great public questions coming before those important committees.

He became a member of the Committee on Finance in 1895. That was a period of monetary and industrial depression. It was believed at that time that Congress should attempt to do something to alleviate those conditions; and Senator PLATT entered upon that work, in connection with other members of the Finance Committee, with a patient industry and interest which finally resulted in the passage of what is known as the "Dingley law." Whatever may be said of the fruits of that law by its friends or its critics, it is certain that it was a most important and valuable piece of legislation, which occupied the Finance Committee for many months and the two Houses for the extra session of 1897, called by President McKinley for that purpose.

At a later period Senator PLATT became a member of the subcommittee which prepared with great care the bill known as "An act to define and fix the standard of values, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes." That act is, perhaps, next to the resumption act, the most important law with reference to our finances that has been passed since the close of the civil war. It undertook to make permanent and effective our imperfect monetary system as respects metallic money and as respects our currency, making effective provision for the convertibility of all paper money, issued directly or indirectly, into gold.

Senator PLATT, associated with Senator ALDRICH, chairman, and others, gave the summer of 1899 practically to the consideration and preparation of that great measure, which passed here, I believe, without any very serious debate, although there was criticism of it at the time as to its effectiveness to accomplish the purpose intended. But the six years that have elapsed since that measure became a law have certainly justified the wisdom of its passage.

The most important single statute, however, in which Senator PLATT took a conspicuous part and of which he was the author was that concerning our relations with Cuba after the close of the war with Spain. After the close of the Spanish war it became apparent in this body that our relations with Cuba were then, and were likely to continue to be, of such consequence as to require a committee of this body to deal with them. The Senate in 1899 provided for a Committee on Cuban Relations, which committee was, in its personnel, composed of the older and most experienced members of the Senate. Senator PLATT by common consent was selected as the chairman of that committee. How wisely and how faithfully those duties were performed by the committee and by its chairman is well known to the people of this country and to the people of Cuba.

The Platt amendment, so called, which was placed upon the Army appropriation bill, was one of the most important pieces of legislation which has been enacted in our parliamentary history, dealing, as it did, with our relations to another country, with which we were associated, but which had not been taken into full accord with our system of government. New and wholly novel questions were involved.

Senator PLATT and his committee prepared that measure, and offered it in this body to be placed on the Army appropriation bill of 1901. I do not give him, and I think it would not be quite just to give him the sole credit of originating that measure. It originated in the Committee on Cuban Relations, of which he was chairman. His legal and analytic mind was a potential force in its preparation, and he may be fairly considered its author. It is well to note that this legislation was considered so important that, by unanimous consent, it was placed on the Army appropriation bill and was not considered as an independent measure. Such measures are only put upon appropriation bills when imperative necessity so requires, and when both, or all, political parties recognize the importance of the measure.

These are some of the great measures which Senator PLATT originated or participated in the framing of, and were placed in our statutes. They will live in the history of our country so long as that history shall survive.

Senator PLATT was constantly in attendance here. He was faithful in the performance of every duty, whether in committee or in the Senate itself. He was an able debater, although, as has been said by the Senator from Connecticut, he was not considered one of the orators of the body; but if in dealing with any subject plain, logical, and concise statement and keen analysis are elements of oratory, then Senator PLATT, by their exhibition here on many occasions, was able to convince the Senate that he had at least the qualifications of an orator.

Mr. President, I have only briefly outlined the long-continued services of Senator PLATT in order to show that he well merited the right to be named one of the leaders of the Senate.

In all his public service he was conscientious in the examination of subjects committed to his care and in the preparation of legislation brought before the Senate.

I knew him well and served with him on some of the committees I have named for months at a time. I learned to appreciate his simple, quiet character and to admire his acute and discriminating intellect and well-instructed mind. When the annals of the Senate shall be written, it will be found that the name of Senator PLATT will occupy a deservedly high place.

We all mourn his departure; we shall miss him much as a member of this body and in all the relations of life.

I regret, Mr. President, that I have been unable to pay a more fitting tribute to the character of our departed colleague, but could not allow the occasion to pass without a brief expression of appreciation of his great attributes as a legislator and statesman worthy of the first rank in the history of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, as one of the three Senators remaining in this body who were the colleagues of Senator PLATT in his entire career in the Senate, an opportunity is afforded me that I never expected to have, and a melancholy duty of recalling to the Senate and the country the wave of national sorrow that followed his departure hence, and the more agreeable privilege of pointing to his excellent example as a memento that is gratefully cherished by the Senate.

The sorrow and regret of his personal associates who remain, when any good man dies, is like a cloud that reflects in greater splendor the higher lights that are above it and then dissolves in tears, or is swept away. So our bereavement at the loss of Senator PLATT is compensated to the Senate and the country by the memory of his virtues that we are now proud to record.

It is high eulogium to say of anyone who has served in the Senate that his moral worth, his loyalty to truth and justice, his learning and abilities, his conduct and example are worthy of a tribunal that is endowed with the broadest and highest powers of constitutional government. It is no less praise of such a man to say that, in common with American people, his love and devotion to the country, its institutions, and its organic law, was pure, and was inspired with the single motive of patriotic duty.

Posterity, through coming generations, will say such things without reserve or qualification about the service in the Senate and in the councils of State of the great Senator from Connecticut; and that is his fitting eulogium that none can now pronounce in its full meaning.

His great services were not performed in some conspicuous acts of the most vital importance, though these are not wanting to accentuate a career that was still more excellent because of his modest, earnest, and faithful observance of every duty. His forceful, successful, and controlling leadership in the Senate without any manifestation of ambitious impulses or purposes, signalizes Senator ORVILLE H. PLATT as being a model American Senator, whose example, now that he is gone, is worth nearly as much to the Senate and the country as his unfailing labors were worth while he lived.

The example lives and will long live in the Senate, like the still small voice that is ever present in honest hearts, to whose admonitions none can turn a deaf ear without giving offense to the public conscience. There is great and national reason for congratulation that his example in the Senate remains to us as a priceless legacy. It is not always so conspicuous in its grandeur as to attract public admiration with its splendors, but it is always true as a guide to such as are seeking to contribute their labors as honest and diligent workers for the general welfare and for the safety of a self-governing people. It is a warning against excesses in the use of the authority of their own laws, in derogation of the true majesty of their own sovereign powers. It is a remonstrance against overzealous aggression that has often turned a good cause into a licentious oppression.

Such tendencies are prevalent in many movements that are called "popular demands" for the reform of our organic laws. The memory of Senators, among whom he was abreast with the foremost, still fills the Senate Chamber with affectionate admonitions to their successors to guard with fidelity the essential rights of the people and the States. These will not go unheeded, whatever may be the clamors or the traductions against the Senate of the United States.

One voice that is no longer audible in this Chamber, a voice of sympathy and courage, still speaks to us through the voiceless air, like the message from a distant shore that was telegraphed to our ships far out on the Pacific Ocean, and called them to the rescue of humanity when San Francisco perished.

We hear and will obey the call to duty, whispered to our hearts from the invisible shores of eternity, and the Senate will still stand steadfastly in support of the Constitution of the United States, under our oaths to God. To Him we will bow in submission, as our Pacific coast is kneeling in sackcloth and ashes; but no man's authority will be accepted as a release from our vows, whatever may betide us.

ORVILLE H. PLATT, with a host of other great and noble Senators who have passed away since I first took my seat in this body, is here in spirit, with the same words to encourage us that were spoken in his every utterance and were true in every act: "Be faithful to duty in the fear of God."

Senator PLATT was, in outward seeming to those who did not know the shrinking modesty of his nature, a man of marble, cold and polished in statuesque dignity, with little love for his kind. In fact, he was so tender a lover of all who were suffering affliction or were in danger of the visitations of wrong and injustice that his chief joy in life was in giving them comfort and strength, and in lifting their hopes above despair.

As the great and proud race of Indans are disappearing from their fatherland, which no Indian would ever desert nor be driven from it by forces that made death the penalty of resistance, none of them will forget the sympathy of Senator PLATT in his patient, just, and humane devotion to the rights that remained to them after more than two centuries of warfare for the maintenance of their original independence. He provided for them in their necessitous condition almost as a father would provide for his family. His great abilities and industrious labors were always engaged in their service when needed, so that none were neglected; and the records of the Senate are a history of his work that carries honor to his memory on every page that relates to Indian affairs.

His only possible reward was the consciousness of duty well and honsetly performed.

The proud and silent nod of the grateful Indian in approbation of the equally proud and silent assistance of the great Senator was the only token of friendship between men who were sternly just in their actions, and neither of them asked nor expected nor granted favors.

Old Geronimo, the Apache king of the desert, whose courage and blood has burnished the epaulettes of generals whom he has fought from obscurity into distinction, is dying in his tepee in Arizona. He has become a devout and faithful Christian man, under such tutelage as Senator PLATT has encouraged.

When recently asked if he desired longer to live, he answered: "Yes; I am still of some use here." He said that he had some battles yet to fight for his tribe under a new King; that his enemy was no longer the white man, but the prince of darkness, who had destroyed many thousands of red men in wars with white men. He said his tribe had gone on a new warpath and he wanted to lead them against the doer of all evil. On being assured that his death would lead them to the land of eternal rest, where they would follow him, he said: "Yes; I will go to that land of rest, where Christ is expecting me, but a poor old Indian can serve Him better here, in fighting the evil one, than he can in heaven, where he is not needed, and I hope God will give me a little more time."

If there was one thought of regret in the mind of the great Senator as he was passing from death into life it was like that which inspired the petition of Geronimo when he prayed that God would still give him greater length of days that he might help his people.

Honors like these, won in the path of duty, cluster about the memory of Senator PLATT. They proclaim his right to the homage that the Senate now offers in memory of a man who was truly great and good.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the spirit, forevermore, for their works do follow them.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, my personal acquaintance with Senator PLATT commenced when he entered the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress, March 18, 1879, with a well-earned reputation as a lawyer and legislator. He had served the people of his native State in the capacity of secretary of state, as speaker of the house of representatives, and as a member of the State senate. His executive and legislative service at home and his legal ability especially fitted him for the proper discharge of his duties as a member of this body. Modest and unassuming in his intercourse with his fellow-members, he immediately secured their confidence in his ability and sincerity. He was industrious, painstaking in his work, and when he had secured the necessary facts on which to base his opinions he was persistent in maintaining them, which he did with a logic and force that usually carried conviction, and thus he soon became an influential member of this body.

He was assigned to the several committees with which new members of this body must be content. He accepted such assignments without complaint, and immediately interested himself with zeal in the work of the committees to which he had been assigned. His thorough examination of all matters coming before the committees of which he was a member made him at once a valuable member, not only of the committee, but of the Senate. His careful attention to matters before the Senate and his positiveness of conviction as to matters he had considered soon brought him to an active participation in the work of the Senate, and he continued to hold that relation to the Senate up to the close of the last session in which he participated, a few weeks before his death.

He was a party man with a strong partisan spirit, because he believed his party was best calculated to secure the highest degree of progress and prosperity it was possible for a nation to attain. While he was a partisan and defended the principles of his party with intelligence and vigor he recognized that there were two political parties in this country, and that there might be both wisdom and patriotism in those differing with him. He was a good type of Americanism, and his aspiration for his country was for all parts and all the people within its borders.

For a little over twenty-six years he represented the State of Connecticut in this body, and during that time maintained not only the confidence of the people of the State that sent him here, but of all the people of other States, and he was recognized as one of the leading members of the Senate. During these many years of service in this body he stood for what he believed to be right, and, whether losing or winning, was always courteous and considerate of his opponents.

While he was a member of this body seven States were admitted to the Union, and, as he was a member of the Committee on Territories, he prepared three of the reports favoring such action, and gave his cordial support to the admission of each and every one.

His length of service here was much beyond that which usually falls to those becoming members of this body. Only few persons in our history of over one hundred years have held the distinction of serving twenty-six years in the United States Senate. I believe the number is only twelve.

Of the seventy-six Senators who were members of the first session of the Forty-sixth congress only three are now members of this body, and only thirteen others are living.

The death of one of our members who has so many years been an active and influential member may properly be said to be a national loss, and I am sure every member of this body in his death felt that he had suffered a personal loss.

We can do nothing to add to his fame or reputation, but we can bear willing and loving testimony to his high character, his many valuable services to State and nation, and express our profound grief at his death.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, twenty-five years of intimate and unbroken friendship and of the closest association in the public service and the examination of public questions gave me an ample opportunity to know and appreciate Senator PLATT'S character and public services. When the history of our time (an eventful period of remarkable national development and expansion) is written, the historian must assign Senator PLATT a place in the very first rank of constructive statesmen.

His advice and counsel in the consideration of grave questions of public policy were invaluable, and nearly all of the great legislative acts adopted during his service in the Senate bear the impress of his mental vigor, constructive ability, and strength of character.

In the presence of his associates, and after the statements to which you have listened, it is not necessary for me to enter into the details of his work in the Senate. That portion of his work which was, perhaps, best known to the public, although not by any means the most valuable to the country, was connected with the solution of the perplexing problems growing out of the Spanish-American war, and especially the adoption of the Platt amendment.

His valuable services as chairman of the Committee on Territories and as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs are familiar to the Senate. Although Senator PLATT was for many years a leading member of the Judiciary Committee, and at the time of his death its chairman, a large portion of his more important work was upon practical questions not connected with this committee.

Representing a constituency with widely varied industrial interests, he naturally took an active and important part in the preparation and discussion of tariff legislation. In the debate upon the tariff act of 1883 his wide knowledge of practical affairs and sound judgment impressed the Senate. He took an even more prominent part in the tariff discussions of 1890 and 1894.

In 1895 he became a member of the Senate Finance Committee, and was an active and influential member of the subcommittee that prepared the amendments to the act of 1897 which were adopted by the Senate. No man gave to the country more valuable service in connection with the adoption of these important legislative acts than the Senator from Connecticut.

Senator PLATT was a true son of New England, whose teachings and traditions were exemplified in his life and character. He was conservative and at the same time fearless; he had none of the arts of the demagogue, and never swerved from the clear path of public duty on account of popular clamor. He was a careful and conscientious student of all public questions, and to my mind in every respect an ideal Senator. He was simple and just by nature, able, intelligent, courageous, and wise with the wisdom that dominates and controls.

Although he was by nature intensely practical and shrank instinctively from anything like pretense and cant, yet in thought and action he always adopted the highest possible standards and invariably followed the highest ideals. I venture the assertion that no man ever held a membership in the Senate who had to a greater extent the confidence and esteem of his associates than the late Senator PLATT.

I can not refrain from saying a few words with reference to our personal relations. The fact that we represented adjoining States, whose industries and material interests were practically identical, was not the cause, but rather an incident to our warm personal friendship. Throughout its existence there was, on my part, a constant growth of admiration and affection for the man. In every phase of my work here I found his counsel most helpful. In his death I am conscious of the loss of a dear friend, who was, all in all, the best man I ever knew.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, among the remarkable men who framed the Constitution of the United States two of the most conspicuous were Roger Sherman and Oliver Ellsworth, delegates from the State of Connecticut. To them and particularly to the former was due the great compromise which preserved the power of the States in the new system by securing to them equality of representation in the Senate, to which was due more than to any other one condition the success of the Philadelphia convention and its complete but narrow escape from failure and defeat. The provision thus adopted in regard to the basis of representation in the Senate and the House was known as the Connecticut compromise, in honor of the men whose skill, foresight, and ability brought it into existence. Both Sherman and Ellsworth subsequently became Senators and helped to organize the new Government which the Constitution had called into being. To Ellsworth, who was afterwards Chief Justice and one of the commissioners who made the peace with France, we also owe the judiciary act, a law which has so long withstood the test of time and of changing conditions that it seems to-day to possess almost the fixity and sanctity of the Constitution itself.

Neither Sherman nor Ellsworth was a brilliant orator like Patrick Henry, nor a great administrator and leader like Hamilton, nor a consummate party chief and political manager like Jefferson. They were public men of large ability and strong character, preeminently constructive statesmen of the Hamiltonian school, who left enduring monuments of their wisdom and foresight in the Constitution, which they helped to frame, and in the laws which they placed upon the statute book.

Men, however, of such unusual character and strong mental qualities as Sherman and Ellsworth leave their mark not merely upon the legislation and the history of their time, but upon the minds of the communities in which they live, a very lasting memorial, for habits of mind, although as impalpable as air, are often more imperishable than stone or bronze.

> Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
> Of princes shall outlive the powerful rhyme—

said the greatest of all poets. The rhyme of the poet is but words, words are but the thoughts of men grown articulate, and yet he who shapes and influences the thoughts and imagination of men leaves in his due proportion a monument which will endure when iron has rusted and marble crumbled away.

The community which produced Sherman and Ellsworth was naturally extremely apt to receive the impress of their influence, and these two men stamped themselves deeply upon the modes of thought and upon the instinctive mental attitude toward great questions of the people of Connecticut who had given them to the nation and to the public service. Those who came after them insensibly followed the path their great predecessors had marked out, and although questions changed and new issues arose the habit of mind and mode of thought remained unaltered. Nature, we are told, is careful of the type no matter how indifferent she may be to the individual, and certain it is that in communities of strong character and salient qualities of intellect habits of thought not only endure, but the type is reproduced. The type may not be continuous, but it is almost unfailingly recurrent.

It always seemed to me as I watched Senator PLATT, listened to his speeches, and passed in my relations with him from acquaintance to friendship that I recognized in him the qualities and the statesmanship of Roger Sherman and Oliver Ellsworth. When a few years ago I had occasion to make a study of Ellsworth's career, I felt sure that I understood him and realized what manner of man he was because I knew Senator PLATT.

This type, which I had thus found in history and then met in daily life, is as fine as it is strong, and comes out as admirably in its modern exemplar as in those which illustrated the great period of Constitution making and of the upbuilding of the National Government. Senator PLATT was conspicuously a man of reserved force and of calm reason. I have seen the calmness disappear in the presence of what he believed imported either evil to the Republic or wrong to man, but I never saw the wisdom of his counsels, no matter how much he may have been moved, distorted, or disturbed. Naturally a lover of all the traditions of ordered liberty and obedience to law in which he had been reared, and which were ingrained in his nature, he was as far removed as possible from the stagnation and reactionary tendencies which too often injure and discredit conservatism. Because he clung to that which was good was never a reason with him for resisting change. On the contrary he sought and urged improvement always. The service he rendered in the case of the copyright law was but one instance among many of his well-directed zeal in behalf of civilization and of an enlightened progress which should keep pace with the march of events. His mind was too constructive ever to be content with immobility or to accept the optimism satirized by Voltaire, that "whatever is, is right." He wished to make the world better and the lives of men happier, and he knew this could not be done by doggedly and unreasoningly resisting all change and all advances merely because he revered the principles long ago established and had abiding faith in the foundations of free government laid deep and strong by the fathers of the Republic. In nearly all the important legislation which went to enactment during his long career of public service, those who will take the trouble to study the records will find the sure trace of his unobtrusive, but strong and shaping hand. One great achievement of constructive statesmanship which is not only fixed among our laws, but which has become part of the constitution of another country bears his honored name. Yet there are many more like unto it and scarcely less important in which he bore a leading part or which were due to him alone that have no name attached to them and the true authorship of which will only be revealed to the future student of history when he is delving for material among the dry dust of dead debates.

To be anonymous in his work was much more characteristic of Mr. PLATT than to affix his signature where all men might read it. He seemed to me not only to care less for self-advertising, but to be more averse to it than almost any public man I ever knew. He longed for results, and was finely indifferent when it came to the partition of the credit for obtaining them. This is a phase of mind, a kind of personal pride and self-respect, not unworthy of consideration, for it is sufficiently rare in these days of ours, so flooded with news and so overwhelmed by easy printing. I do not think Mr. PLATT ever reasoned the matter out and then rested, satisfied that lasting fame and a place in the history of the time had no relation whatever to the noisy notoriety of the passing hour, with its deafening clamors ever ringing in our ears. It was simply part of his own nature, because ostentation in all its forms was distasteful to him and because he shrank from exhibiting himself, his emotions, or his works as sedulously as some men strive to avoid anything which resembles retirement or privacy. His industry was unflagging, and again, in small things as in great, in defeating a doubtful claim as in building up a great law, he sought results and nothing else. If he could pass the measure he desired, he was more than glad to dispense with making a speech. If he could defeat an obnoxious bill by an objection, or throw out a bad amendment on a point of order, he was quite content to avoid debate; but if debate was necessary he was as formidable as a lucid, trained, legal mind, coupled with full information and a power of vigorous, clear statement, could make him. He was thorough in all he undertook—as effective in the endless complications of a great tariff as in guarding against the perils which beset our Indian legislation. Outside this Chamber his services to the Indians, and to the good name and credit of the United States in its dealings with those difficult and helpless savages, performed during many years of unremitting toil as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will never be rightly valued or understood. It was the kind of hard, self-sacrificing work for the sake of the right and to help others which must be in itself and in the doing thereof its own great and sufficient reward.

I have tried to indicate very imperfectly those qualities which seem to me especially to distinguish Senator PLATT as a statesman, for a statesman of high rank he most certainly was. But I am well aware that I have dwelt almost exclusively upon his effectiveness, his indifference to self-advertisement, and his unremitting pursuit of results and have passed by many of the qualities which went to make up the man and to account for his large success. His great ability, his power of work, his knowledge, his sense of justice, his fearlessness in the battle with wrong, his capacity for working with other men, were all conspicuous in Mr. PLATT, and all necessary to the distinguished achievements of his life. He possessed also a very much rarer gift in his complete retention of that flexibility which is so apt to diminish as men advance in life. The mind, like the muscles, tends to stiffen as we grow older, and only too frequently no effort is made to avoid the consequent rigidity. Both mind and muscle will go on performing most admirably the particular functions to which they have been accustomed, but they both alike recoil from a new idea or an unwonted exertion. From all this Mr. PLATT was extraordinarily free. Neither his age nor his natural conservatism hindered the movements of his mind or made him shrink from a new idea or tremble and draw back from an unexpected situation. In the last ten years of his life he saw sudden and vast changes in the relations of the United States to the rest of the world and in our national responsibilities. He did not hide from them or shut his eyes and try to repel them. He met the new conditions not only with the flexibility, but with the keen interest of youth, while at the same time he brought to the solution of the new problems all the wisdom of a long experience. He did not turn away with dark forebodings from the startling changes which the rush of hurrying events swept suddenly upon us, but confronted them with a cheerful heart, a smile upon his lips, and a firm faith in the future of his people and of his country.

> We knew him not? Ah, well we knew
> The manly soul, so brave, so true,
> The cheerful heart that conquered age,
> The child-like silver-bearded sage.

A very fine public career ended when Senator PLATT died. In him we lost a statesman of a type which the country can ill spare, a thorough American type which we may well pray to have sustained and renewed among us. It is not a type which certain ephemeral defamers, just now very vocal, admire; but it is to statesmen of this precise kind and stature that we owe in largest measure the foundation and organization of our Government and the ordered liberty and individual freedom which have made the United States what it is to-day. Senator PLATT was a man who was at once an honor to the country which he served and guided and a vindication of our faith in a government of the people who chose him as representative of themselves.

I have spoken of Senator PLATT only as a public man. But to us here his death is much more than a public loss. He was our friend. Those who come after us will know of his public services, of the work he did, of the large place he filled in the history of the time; but we also remember, and shall never forget, the honesty of heart and mind, the simplicity and purity of life, the humor, the love of books and sound learning, and, above all, the kindness which never failed and the loyalty which never faltered. Others may, with full faith in the destiny of the Republic we can confidently say, others will come to take up and carry on the public work to which his life was given, but the place which the tried and trusted friend has left empty in our affections can not again be filled.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, members of small bodies of fixed number, like the Senate, whose maximum is ninety, have sharply and painfully impressed upon them the passing away of their fellows. In cities and in populous communities the death rate is about the same proportion from year to year. Gradually, silently, and yet with unerring regularity, almost precise, the diminution comes. The accretions of population come, too, and in the order of nature in excess of those who depart. So the main body of society generally presents the appearance of health, vigor, and continuous progress. Here, indeed, no chair is long vacant. Flowers that welcome the newcomer have often marked the black-veiled seat where his predecessor sat. "The king is dead! Long live the king!" This speaks the state of power where succession is instantaneous. Likewise in all official lives the office and he who is to fill it make quick connection.

Nevertheless, the stroke that removes one who has long interwoven his life in the work of a great public body, who has bound himself in associations of friendship and cooperative tasks with his companions, who has become a part of the business of many constituents, who has stood forth as the representative of a great State and as the champion of ideas, and, indeed, has translated his being into law and doctrine—such a stroke suddenly snaps many ties and dissolves many vistas of pleasant and instructive contemplation.

It must be to many, and it seems to all, as if a landmark of memory and hope and faith and affection had suddenly crumbled to the dust. If we lift our gaze from the tomb of a single one who has departed to survey the scene of desolation which a few years make in the ranks of a body like this, we are well-nigh appalled to realize how swiftly and surely death consummates its work of change and dissolution.

A short time since I heard the venerable ex-Vice-President of the United States, who worthily filled from 1889 to 1893 the chair which you, Mr. President, now occupy, declare that since he left this seat forty of those who were Senators during his term of service had responded to the last roll call. We almost seem to hear the voice that says:

> I am the Reaper.
> All things with heedful hook
> Silent I gather.
> Pale roses touched with the spring,
> Tall corn in summer,

To-day, Mr. President, is the anniversary of the departure forever from the scenes of life of one who was long connected with this body. That he is freshly remembered now is only a token of that further remembrance which will follow. ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT, the senior Senator from Connecticut, has left us. He and Joseph Roswell Hawley were for well-nigh a quarter of a century associated here. They were well mated, worked in unison in the tasks committed to their hands.

The former took his seat March 18, 1879, and was reelected in 1885, in 1890, in 1897, and in 1903. The latter became a Representative in the Forty-second Congress to fill a vacancy, was reelected to the Forty-third and the Forty-sixth Congresses, became a Senator March 4, 1881, and was reelected in 1887, in 1893, and in 1899.

Both of them were honest, able, and upright men, and both of them were patriots devoted to their duties as citizens and as Representatives. Both of them performed their daily drudge work with patient assiduity. Both of them were efficient and constructive factors in the composition of measures, and both were enlightened and powerful advocates of opinion upon the floor. Both of them were thoroughly imbued with the constitutional and political views of their State, their section, their party, and both were thoroughly representative of the predominant national ideas which have for the most part shaped the destinies of this nation through a long and mighty era of stirring conflicts and of prodigious changes and progressions. Both of them rendered public services of a high order, which have woven the threads of their accomplishments into the texture of our national existence. Both were stimulated and upheld by the sincerity of their faiths and by the faithful approbation of those whom they served and sent them here. Both of them at the end of long lives and great careers of public usefulness sank to rest by all respected and beloved and deeply mourned by those who knew them best.

Most worthily has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] who succeeded Senator Hawley, and most worthily have many of the associates of Senator PLATT recounted and detailed the public services and commemorated his abilities and virtues. Others will follow me who will do likewise. For my part, I shall not seek to repeat much that has been and much that will be better said than by myself. But I was the contemporary of Senator PLATT through three terms of Senatorial service. While I had not intimate associations with him, in the contact of committee work I did have opportunity, both in the Committee on Indian Affairs and that of the Judiciary, to observe his patient devotion to whatever task came for him to do. I became familiar, also, with his marked traits of character, and I learned to appreciate his sturdy, sincere, and steadfast nature.

Senator PLATT was a serious-minded, brave, earnest, and straightforward man. He believed his creeds. To him they were not mere forms and citations. He was always ready to stand forth to proclaim them and to share their fate.

He devoted himself with tireless energy and with the compact and subdued enthusiasm of firm conviction to every work of detail which he undertook. He illustrated a truth which we sometimes overlook amongst the conspicuous and stirring scenes of life—

To know
That which before us lies in daily life
Is the prime wisdom.

He was typical of his State, of his section, and of his party, and he was distinctively a representative man in all he stood for. Most of the great problems that engaged his thought and effort have found their solution through the processes of time, and new sails are now seen on the horizon before us.

As we seek to measure justly the men of the past we do not carry into our judgments the partisan feelings which inflamed them or their combatants in hours of conflict, for it is the happy faculty of a wholesome nature to rate men according to the circumstances which environed them and according to the manner in which they dealt with their own obligations and duty. Abraham Lincoln said on one occasion that he must confess that events had controlled him far more than he had controlled events; and if one who was at the head of such mighty power as he wielded could feel so sensitively how little any one man can do in the great movements of the human race, how much more must it be felt by those who play but minor parts in the drama that is in their time upon the stage!

It can not be doubted that such a character, such abilities, such services, and such devoted zeal as are presented in the story of this distinguished Senator are and will be respected, appreciated, and commemorated by all his countrymen, whether they concur in his opinions or not.

I recall now, even as I seek to speak something of his career, how on one occasion I saw his fine, dark eye brighten and his face light with enthusiasm when, with a deep feeling of admiration and satisfaction, he spoke of the manner in which the men of the South had gone to the front in the Spanish war, and I saw then, as through a window in his soul, how it responded to high and generous thought.

There is a chapter in Bancroft's History of the Constitution which it would be well for many to meditate upon in forming their opinions of the characters and events which have gone to compound the history of this mighty framework of popular government. He points out the lines of the assimilation of the American people, and traces them largely through their common language, through the abstract truths which that language communicated to their minds, and through its adaptability for use as an instrument of the common law, for science, for description, for the debates of public life, for every kind of poetry, from humor to pathos, and from nature to the heart and mind.

But—

He says—

the distinctive character of the new people as a whole, their nationality, so to say, was the principle of individuality which prevailed among them as it had nowhere done before. This individuality was strengthened by the struggles with nature in her wildness, by the remoteness from the abodes of ancient institutions, by the war against the traditions of absolute power and old superstitions till it developed itself into the most perfect liberty in thought and action; so that the American came to be marked by the readiest versatility, the spirit of enterprise, and the faculty of invention.

No State better illustrates the truth of which the great American historian spoke than that which was the birthplace of Senator ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT; and none has possessed institutions better framed by the wisdom of man to stimulate individuality of opinion, to spread enlightenment, and to open the way for the operations of that combined action through which alone the volumes of popular power can be delivered.

Thomas Jefferson declared—though I do not know that I can with precision state his exact words—that the New England town system was the best organization for the framework of society the world has ever known. It had its beginnings in collection of the early settlers together in the simple stockades in which they gathered to defend their families from the frontier Indians. So, out of the heart of war, was taught a lesson of peace, which has marched in triumph across the continent. Church and school and town meeting house succeeded upon the spot of the rude fortification. The community took part in their own affairs. Their selectmen exercised representative power under the eyes of their principals. Home rule intrenched itself, and the masses strengthened their organic faculties by continually exercising them in their own local concerns.

Ere the days when the railroads and telegraphs and the methods of modern communication of intelligence came about the people who settled the American colonies formed their own distinct societies, made up their own opinions, and were as different from each other in some of their methods of thought as are to-day the citizens of foreign nations. Fifty or seventy-five years ago you could almost tell from what part of the country an American came. Something in voice, something in dress, something in peculiarity of expression, or some other mark—you hardly know how to describe it—indicated the geographical location of the person whom you met. But to-day, Mr. President, through independent action and through the powers of organic thought, the American people are fast molding themselves together in the most homogeneous society that ever was framed on so great a scale in the history of mankind. Men to-day, by the mechanism of traffic, may sit down to a meal of the same food, no matter from what climate it was gathered or in what climate it is partaken of. Through the genius of manufacture the humblest and the richest are clad so nearly alike that dress is no longer an indication of social rank, unless it be that one who is conspicuous therein marks himself for peculiar animadversion.

The multiplication of books and schools and newspapers has brought before all minds much of the same thought; and to-day, as we stand to mourn the death of a great Senator from New England, we realize in his career that manliness, that openness, and that steadfastness which will find tributes of praise and commendation in every township and in every hamlet of the United States, men not caring whether they agreed with him or not, but contemplating with respect the fact that what he deemed right he stood for, and feeling that therein he offered unto them the most noble of human examples.

We are told, Mr. President, that offenses will come—and so they do most constantly—from nation to nation, from section to section, from minorities to majorities, from majorities to minorities, from corporation to corporation, from church to church, and from societies and individuals of all kinds to each other. "Woe be unto them by whom offense cometh;" but woe has never yet been proclaimed against those who bear the burden of offenses when they have come, and the martyrs who suffer and die for the cause for which they stand are seldom the people who raise the wrangle out of which came the offense of war.

The world has not yet got wise enough, noble enough, or great enough to lay aside the sword. I may add that it has not yet got safe enough, for men will wear swords until they may lie down under their own vine and fig tree, with none to make them afraid, and they should wear them.

There has never yet been a Quaker nation; and Franklin, the Quaker, taught that "we must hang together or hang separately." The Quaker statesman and philosopher illustrated how the man of peace may be compelled to war, how the statesman, like unto the soldier, though not a soldier, must stand forth and share the burdens when offense cometh. Both sides amongst nations, amongst sections, amongst majorities, amongst minorities, amongst all bodies, and amongst all individuals by whom offense cometh, generally share in the wrong which brings it, directly or indirectly. Even as to strife between man and man, each is apt to have some share of the responsibility, and if it be not in the man or men who be present there, it will be surely found in some antecedent of the history of them or theirs. The offense of one generation descends, it may be, for another to pay for—so united is man in his history, and so sure is wrong to find somewhere its retribution.

Such is man and such the infirmity of his nature, even in its finest aspects. This is universal truth, and it warns against him who sits in the seat of the scornful. It reminds us, too, of that other truth, that there is some good in all peoples, some in all the movements of all the peoples, some in all the organizations of all the peoples, even as there is some good in each individual creature. How to increase that good, which in itself displaces what is evil, is the problem of mankind, and the soul of the moral principle. That, too, is the problem to which the world is all the time, with unceasing constancy, bending itself, directing to it its loftiest faculties and aims, whether they be exercised by the humble workman, by the soldier, by the statesman, by the philosopher, by the preacher, by the teacher, by the poet, by the scientist, or by the builder. Enthusiasm for the right and the good is the mainspring of human endeavor, and in the heart of the warmest and the sternest partisan is that ideal which stirs the pulse and drives the arm.

When the great laureate of England said, "Best men are molded of their faults," this great truth is realized. When Christ said, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much," He showed not only "the quality of mercy which is not strained," but He also showed that divine comprehension which knows that error often flows from the very intensity of the highest and noblest attributes of man's nature.

It has been said by several of Senator PLATT's friends here—and no man can ponder this strong man's long service and constant devotion to his tasks of duty and fail to realize it—that he was an idealist. Not one with thirst for the vain shows and pomps of life; not one with prurient ambition for ostentatious title nor for place and power. Rather was he the man of rigorous ideals of personal conduct and of public ends; not a visionary indeed, but one who kept realities in view and steered his course to subserve them. A man who followed those ideals patiently, sturdily, and steadily from month to month, from year to year, from generation to generation, until old age called him to rest from his labors bespoke by his deeds the sincerity that was in him and gave back to those who uplifted him the best fruits of his toil.

It is in this character that I am pleased to think of him. Men who fight the battles of a people, whether it be on the bloody field or in the forum, or wheresoever duty may lie, learn to consider and to respect the opinions and worthy actions of others. If to-morrow there were one of us who sought to leave a point of honor to men who would decide it with a firm desire to decide it right, we would as soon select a champion from those to whom we are politically opposed as from many who have been by our side.

So, Mr. President, it affords me a mournful satisfaction to join with my colleagues here in paying sincere respect to the memory of this brave American citizen, this honest and faithful American statesman.

It was my privilege, as a member of the Senate committee, to follow him to his grave. When he died he lived in the same town where he was born, amongst the grand and rugged hills of Litchfield County, from which he went forth as a farmer's boy, and to which he returned ere his days had been numbered, as a distinguished and widely known American statesman.

It must have been a solace to his heart to die at home, amongst those who had loved and cherished him, who had watched his course, and rejoiced in his successes. His funeral was conducted in the most simple and unostentatious form. The people of the State whom he had served, and the friends that he had knit to him by long years of companionship, gathered together to see the last of him. They showed every fitting civility and hospitality to the committee of the Senate who took part in the local exercises by its order. The services were conducted with religious rites, in which the old prayers were said and the old familiar hymns were sung in the village church. Then the procession filed to the village cemetery, and he was laid to rest amongst the tombs of his people and his kindred, whom he had served so long and well.

The sun was low in the west as "earth to earth and dust to dust" was spoken; but the heavens were bright and the skies were blue above us, and the western hills were bathed in the splendor of the gorgeous sunset. Presently darkness and night fell upon the scene. The light of a faithful life dies not with him who lived it. Like the light of the departed sun it shines on undimmed, and renews its cheering radiance as day by day it is revived to the children of men.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, one of the saddest duties which fall to the lot of members of this body is to express their sense of loss at the death of one of their colleagues. In the death of ORVILLE H. PLATT the Senate has met with a loss whose magnitude will be the more fully realized as time passes, for he was one of the oldest in service here, and on his long experience in national affairs and on his trained judgment we who came after him were accustomed to rely. It is with the sincerity which is compelled by long and familiar acquaintance with a man simply honest and upright that we recall the attributes of our deceased colleague, and as he here said on a similar occasion:

> There is no business more important, no hours more wisely spent, than those which we devote to the consideration of the services and virtues of departed Senators.

Few of those who have been members of the Senate have rendered equal services to their country, or have exhibited so many and such lofty virtues as did ORVILLE H. PLATT. He was born in a State whose founders transmitted to their descendants the qualities which stamped him as one of the strong men of the nation. The early settlers of Connecticut must needs have had strength, indomitable courage, character of the highest order, faith, perseverance, and determination to have built up the Commonwealth which has been so powerful a factor in shaping the destiny of the Republic. The privations, difficulties, dangers, and obstacles which were encountered and overcome by the men and women of Connecticut's early days developed those qualities of highest manhood and womanhood which are universally attributed to New England. The weak, the vicious, and the dishonest could not withstand the cruel experiences of those years of conflict with savage nature and savage man. They of necessity went to the wall, and there survived that brave and sturdy stock whose influence has been as a leaven throughout the length and breadth of the land from the foundation of the Republic to the present day. We may truly say of Senator PLATT, as he said of a deceased colleague not many years ago:

> We are proud of our blood, as if it were blood alone to which we are indebted, often forgetting that ancestral character as transmitted to us was built up little by little, slowly, steadily, but surely, by the surroundings amid which our ancestors wrought and fought and died, so that as generation succeeded generation each took on something which it derived from nature and the struggle with nature. * * * Henry Ward Beecher, in speaking of the New England farmers, most truly said: "They made the farms, and the farms made the men."

And the manhood thus acquired was, two hundred years afterwards, represented in and characterized Senator PLATT. In this same eulogy Senator PLATT referred to the need in the United States Senate not only of men of commanding intellect, genius, eloquence, and brilliancy, but of those men of strong sense, industry, and unswerving devotion to principles, "whose general characteristics can be best described by three grand words—sturdy, faithful, true;" and he then said that he thought he would rather it should be written on his tombstone "He was sturdy, faithful, and true" than to have it written "He was eloquent, learned, and great."

That those words, so expressive of steadfast honesty, courage and high intention, will be his best epitaph no one can dispute, for we who knew him here know that to the consideration of every question he brought to bear all those great qualities which make a man sturdy, faithful, and true. From the time he first held a political office in 1857, Senator PLATT distinguished himself as one of the men who approached all public questions in a spirit utterly devoid of all self-seeking and with a single desire of promoting the public good. It was this spirit which gained for him the confidence, respect, and love of the people of Connecticut and which led them to insist that he should take an active part in shaping the history of his own State and of the nation. The qualities of mind and heart which endeared him to his colleagues in this Chamber and which compelled them to seek his counsel and rely upon his judgment were those of a man sturdy in the maintenance of the right, faithful to his high ideal of duty, and true to the spirit of the Republic.

We all know the singleness of purpose with which he grappled with all great questions. The patient study that he devoted to them was for the sole purpose of arriving at the truth, for, like the trained scientist, he knew that truth alone will make a stable foundation for legislation, and that without truth at the bottom all legislation is worse than the falsehood upon which it is based. This was the cause of that laborious, patient, unceasing study of financial, social, and political problems which come before us for solution, and was the means of storing his mind with facts which served as signposts on the road to that goal which he always sought—the best interests of the people of the United States. It was this quality of thoroughness which made him a guide in whom all could place confidence and whom we could follow with the assurance that we could not go far astray. I think every Senator will say that during his service here with ORVILLE H. PLATT he has observed no one of his colleagues who was so vigilant in watching the course of legislation, so sure to discover dangers, and so prompt to apply remedies. In his treatment of measures, as of men, he was absolutely fair and impartial, which commanded for him the highest respect of Senators of all parties, for his efforts were always for the good of all the people, and in them partisanship had no place. At those times when legislation of vital character was before the Senate, Senator PLATT was clearly seen to be far above party and to be a statesman in the truest sense of the term. To him the country owes some of the most important legislation of recent years—legislation affecting us as a nation—to which Democrats as well as Republicans gave most hearty assent. I know that he had among those who belonged to the opposite political party as sincere admirers and as warm friends as among his colleagues on his own side of the Chamber. His honesty, sincerity, and patriotism broke down the barriers of party, and he was acknowledged here to be, as he sought to be, a Senator of the United States.

But Death wields his scythe here as elsewhere, and cuts down the greatest and most useful public men as he does the humblest citizen. The sentence which he executes impends over all who live, and from it there is no escape. But in those who have lived wisely, purely, and unselfishly there is no fear, and men like ORVILLE H. PLATT go to their rest with the quietude of those who retire to sleep after a day's work well done. Others will come forward to take the places thus made vacant. Many will be eloquent, many brilliant, many learned, many strong and powerful, but none will have a higher ambition, or attain it more completely than ORVILLE H. PLATT, who in his life work developed those great qualities that he so revered in others, and which made him in truth a man sturdy, faithful, and true.

It is such men as the late Senator PLATT who set the high standard which every member of the United States Senate should seek to reach, and none of those who have gone before are more worthy of emulation than he whose memory we now honor. His honesty and absolute fairness are observable in all his work, and it is this quality which made his opinions guides for legislation, and often they were enacted into legislation itself. Not a sign of selfishness or self-seeking of any kind ever appeared in what he said or did as a Senator. He obliterated himself in the work he had to do, with the result that that work is his greatest monument. It was in the times following the Spanish-American war that he showed himself greatest, when he enunciated the policy which should govern our relations to Cuba, and placed that young nation beyond the reach of the selfish aggression of foreign or domestic foes. The great Platt amendment marks the time when the last lingering desire to secure Cuba for exploitation by Americans became impossible of attainment, and Cuba was made absolutely free and independent, with untrammeled opportunity to work out her destiny in her own way. We all know how easy it would have been to have changed entirely the future of Cuba; how easy it would have been to allow selfishness to dictate national policy at a time like that. But the innate justice and broad charity of Senator PLATT would countenance no temporizing with national honor, and the Senate stood with him on the high ground he had chosen, and the result is the admiration and respect of the world for the work performed.

That broad statesmanship which characterized Senator PLATT, Senator Hoar, and others of the great members of the body who have ceased their labors here, should be for all of us an inspiration and a guide. No narrow views should here dictate our action, no selfish ambitions should swerve us from the straight path of duty to the whole people and to the people as a whole. Domestic laws and foreign policies should first go through such crucible purification as they were accustomed to encounter at the hands of Senator PLATT. As he did, so should we consider without haste, deliberate without passion, weigh in the scales of justice, and decide in the spirit of great love all questions which come before us here. The conservatism of such men as he is the crowning glory of a great mind, and without such minds legislation in a body like the Congress of the United States would present anything but the orderly progress of republican government, which we have, up to this time, been enabled to boast of to the other nations of the world. It is from such minds that come the words of warning that prevent the hasty adoption of ill-judged measures or the subservient consideration of novel policies. It is only such conservatism as was constantly exhibited by Senator PLATT and others who live on the same high plane that will safely pilot the ship of state through the shallows and among the rocks which lie in its course in these times of mental stress and change. And until we have safely passed these dangers, I do not think that any member of this body—certainly not one of the older members who worked long with Senator PLATT—will cease to feel the great loss of his guiding judgment and advice. And it was those very qualities which he so admired in others, and which he possessed in such marked degree, that made him one of the strong men of the nation—one on whom the people could rely to sink himself in his work for them, for they knew that he was in very truth a man sturdy and faithful and true.

I would ask no higher tribute to be written as my epitaph—if it could be truthfully said of me, as it can of him whose memory we to-day honor—than "In whatever position he was placed, he always endeavored to honestly do his duty."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, a year ago to-day Senator PLATT, one of the veterans of this body, closed his earthly career and entered the realms of eternity, to join the ranks of that ever-increasing phalanx of immortals.

He was when he passed away not only a veteran in years and in public service, but he was also a veteran in all the highest and best qualities of a statesman and legislator. Few, if any, excelled him as such.

He came of good English ancestors, who settled in his native State during the first half of the seventeenth century. Gifted with more than ordinary intellectual abilities, he had the advantages of the training in one of the best of the famous New England academies of the first half of the nineteenth century. This training he supplemented with a thorough preparation for the profession of a lawyer. He was an able, conscientious, thorough, and successful lawyer.

He entered the public service of his State in an administrative capacity at an early age. He served in both branches of the State legislature, and served one term as speaker of the lower house.

In March, 1879, he first took his seat in the United States Senate, and he was four times reelected. His last term would have expired March 3, 1909. He was a member of this body for upward of twenty-six years, and during that time he served eighteen years on the Committee on Patents, eight of those years as chairman. He was regarded by all as the best authority on patent law in the Senate.

For sixteen years he was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, where he rendered most valuable and efficient service. No one was better versed than he in all the intricacies of Indian legislation, and no one was more alive than he to the true welfare of the Indians—always on guard to protect and defend them against open and insidious inroads on their rights and interests, but never a block or impediment to the opening and settlement of our vast public domain. His heart went out to the frontiersman, as well as to the Indians. He had none of those hazy and transcendent notions of so-called "Indian rights" or "Indian character" possessed by a school of closet reformers. He gauged the Indian at his true worth and at his real aptitude and ability, and hence he was the most practical and useful friend the Indian had.

For twelve years he was a member of the Committee on Territories, six years as chairman, and while such chairman six States were admitted into the Union, to wit: North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and Wyoming; all prosperous, growing, and progressive States.

For ten years, and up to the time of his death, he was a member of the Committee on Finance, and as such was an active and resolute participant in the enactment of the Dingley tariff law.

For four years he was chairman of the Committee on Cuban Relations, and was partly the author, and the father, of the noted Platt amendment—that great bulwark and mainstay of the Cuban Republic against foes, foreign and domestic.

He was for twelve years a leading member of the Judiciary Committee, and at the time of his death was the chairman of the committee. On this great committee, on account of his skill and learning as a lawyer and on account of his industrious, prudent, and conservative character, he was one of the most active, useful, and safe members, favorable to all reasonable innovations, but sternly set against visionary, revolutionary, or doubtful schemes and measures.

The last great service he rendered in this Chamber was in presiding over the Senate as a court of impeachment in the case of Judge Swayne. The care, dignity, and impartiality with which he performed this great task is fresh in our memories and familiar to us all.

But all this is but a scant outline of the man, his character, his worth, and his work. For more than a quarter of a century the Senate was the great field and forum of his task and work. Here he wrought incessantly, thoroughly, and most effectively. He did not shine with the meteoric splendor of the ardent and finished orator. He never heralded his speeches, nor posed for effect, nor kept his eyes strained on the galleries. But in the hard, laborious, and oftentimes thankless work of scanning and formulating legislation, and in expounding the merits and defects of measures, he exhibited a thoroughness and skill truly rare, and second to none. He had the full confidence of every member of this body, and his opinion and judgment of measures was always regarded as a safe guide and well-nigh infallible. He was a fairly good debater, and could give and take blows, though there was nothing pugnacious in his make-up and nature. He never talked for mere effect, but rather as a duty which he owed to his subject, to himself, and to his associates, and hence his remarks were always instructive, always confined to the real point at issue, and always listened to and heeded. While he was always zealous to promote and press good measures, he was equally zealous and firm as a rock in checking and barring any scheme or measure which he deemed bad, or detrimental to the welfare or best interests of our country.

He was patient, thorough, and painstaking at all times and under all circumstances, and ever kept a vigilant eye on the whole field of legislation. Most of us are content and feel that we perform our duties fairly well if we familiarize ourselves with and keep track of the work of the committees of which we are members, but he, even though he excelled us in this, was not content with such a limited sphere of work. Like the late Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] he had his eye upon and scrupulously took the measure of every important bill upon the the Calendar, so that when it was taken up for consideration he was prepared to intelligently discuss it and point out its merits and defects, and if the bill was a meritorious one it found in him a most valuable ally and supporter, but if in his opinion the bill was unwise or meretricious he never hesitated to attack it and point out with inflexible persistence and clearness its defects. And this he did, not through a spirit of personal hostility to the father of the measure, but through a strong sense of duty which he conscientiously felt he could not shirk. And it was this attribute and characteristic of his that made him such a useful and influential member of this body. He was trusted and relied upon in every great legislative emergency, for his wisdom and conservatism was so pronounced and so familiar to all. He was the fairest legislator I have ever met, modest and without any personal pride. It sometimes happened, though less often than with other men, that he, in the first instance, might misjudge or misapprehend the merits of a measure, but if he did, he was ever ready to be corrected, and when convinced of his mistake he was not merely content to acknowledge the mistake, but he became zealous to make full amends, and this was a trait that endeared him to so many of his associates, especially to new and struggling members. He was never surcharged with that Senatorial dignity so chilling and oppressive to a new member, but always met such a member more than halfway and with a kind and helpful spirit.

We of the great and growing States of the West, who came here with no end of important and meritorious local measures on our hands to promote and pass, which you of the older States are not burdened with and have but a scant conception of, are happy indeed to meet with some of our older brothers here in the East who can appreciate our task and who are willing to help and guide us in our efforts, which to older and more experienced Senators may oftentimes seem crude and awkward. Such a brother and helper was Senator PLATT. His kindly, sympathetic spirit was extended to us in full measure in word and in deed. I know how helpful he was to me on many an occasion in my early days in the Senate. Indeed, his helpfulness abided with me during all my association with him in this body. He seemed my friend from the very start, and so he always remained, without ostentation, ever kind and helpful, to the end. He seemed to delight, not in exploiting his own merits, but rather in helping men and measures that were meritorious and needed his help and assistance. And this came in part from his modesty and in part from his earnest and sincere zeal for the public service. The merits of the cause rather than his own glory seemed uppermost in his thoughts. He took no pains to exploit his own eminence and ability, and hence while here in this Chamber and among his associates he justly ranked among the very highest and the best. He had not as great a reputation and was not as noted in the great world at large as many men of inferior ability and of much less merit. But while he may not have figured in the lime light of the public press as extensively as some other men in public life, and while no blowing of horns and beating of cymbals accompanied him or heralded his efforts and his work, yet he wrought faithfully, heroically, and well and was content with the consciousness that he had performed his duty and served the public weal to the best of his ability, and thus he proved a most instructive example to those of less modesty and to those more disposed to seek notoriety than substantial results.

The moral influence of Senator PLATT was even greater than his intellectual force and power. He impressed everyone who came in contact with him that he was actuated by the highest and noblest motives in all his efforts. No one ever questioned or doubted his honesty, his integrity, and the purity of his motives. There was a serene calmness, coupled with clearness and earnestness, in his deliberations and in his speeches. He was no legislative specialist with only a single hobby or a single line of work. He was equipped for and devoted to every great line of legislative work in a greater measure than most of his colleagues; and above all he gave his entire heart and energy to the work in hand. All that was his he gave to his country with a whole heart and without any reservation. He was faithful in small things as well as in those of greater importance. He left a vacuum in the Senate that is hard to fill. His death was not only a great loss and bereavement to his family, to his State, and to the nation, but also to his associates here in this body, for no one shed a brighter or clearer luster upon the tone, the spirit, and character of the Senate.

He is with us no more, but his life, his work, and his example will be a beacon and an inspiration to us in the days to come, and thus, "though he be dead, yet he still liveth."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to speak not so much of the exalted character and wonderful intellect of this great man as of his fundamental public principles. I wish to speak of ORVILLE H. PLATT, of Connecticut, as the typical American statesman. Of Connecticut? No; of the Republic. No State is great enough to claim a man like him exclusively as its own. He loved Connecticut with a passion which lesser men could never understand; and yet no man so earnestly denied the consequence of a State compared with the nation as did ORVILLE H. PLATT. To him the American people was everything; to him the glory of the people of Connecticut was that they are citizens of the great Republic.

For Senator PLATT was a statesman of the nation. He believed that a member of this body is what the Constitution calls him—a Senator of the United States from a State, and not the Senator of a State, not the envoy of an independent entity, not the ambassador of a separate power. Moreover, he looked on all American industry and business as so interlaced and interdependent that they are one and the same. He regarded the present and future welfare of the entire American people from ocean to ocean as his personal concern and that of every Senator. And so it was that he was the statesman of a people and not the politician of a locality.

And this is the first principle of American statesmanship. For if Senators are merely attorneys for their State and section; if the welfare of one Commonwealth is inconsistent with the welfare of other Commonwealths; if legislation is to be a conflict of hostile interests, and policies a composite of warring industries, our laws will be increasingly weak and inconsistent, and the ultimate dissolution of the Republic the necessary result of the ceaseless battle of irreconcilable forces.

But if Americans are one people; if the Mississippi flows through a common country and our transcontinental trains whirl from Boston to Seattle, never once stopping at a foreign boundary or passing under a foreign flag; if the welfare of Maine and Oregon, of Georgia and Wisconsin, of Texas and New York, is a common warfare; if it is impossible that one State or section, one class or industry, can thrive by any policy or law not good for the whole land; if the motto of the Republic be true that "United we stand, divided we fall;" if Senators are statesmen of the Republic as a whole, sent from States to hold council for the nation as a unit; if this be the true philosophy of our Government and the just conception of our duty as Senators, then the Republic will be immortal—made so by the solidarity of the American people, made so by every American considering the welfare of all Americans and every section the interests of all sections, in which alone is found real wisdom for the individual man or section.

And this was Senator PLATT's ruling principle. That Senators, and especially the newer Senators who did not know him, may understand the great conception that guided him in all his public work, I wish to read an extract from perhaps the greatest speech he ever made. In his notable deliverance on December 19, 1898, he said:

> Mr. President, this is a nation. It has been called by various names. It has been called a Confederated Republic, a Federal Union, the Union of States, a League of States, a rope of sand; but during all the time these names have been applied to it it has been a nation. It was so understood by the framers of the Constitution. It was so decided by the great judges of the Supreme Court in the early days of the Constitution.
> It is too late to deny it, and, Mr. President, it is also too late to admit it and not have faith in it. Intellectual assent to the doctrines of Christianity does not make a man a Christian. It is saving faith that makes the Christian. And a mere intellectual assent to the doctrine that we are a nation does not make the true patriot. It is high time that we come to believe without qualification, to believe in our hearts, in the exercise of patriotic faith, that the United States is a nation. When we come to believe that, Mr. President, many of the doubts and uncertainties which have troubled men will disappear.

By this principle he solved vexed questions, wrote wise statutes, interpreted the fundamental law. He regarded the Constitution not as a compact between independent states, but, as Marshall called it, an "ordinance of national life" established by an undivided and indivisible people. To him the sovereign words of the Constitution are the first three, "We, the people." And so, like Marshall, like Story, like Webster, like Jefferson (who, declaring that we had no express constitutional power to do so, yet made the Louisiana purchase), like Jackson, like Lincoln, like all American statesmen great enough to be yet visible above the receding horizon (aye, and like the American people themselves), Senator PLATT believed that the Constitution grows—grows by interpretation, grows by the use of implied powers not needed till emergency calls them into action, grows by the larger meaning which events and our advancing American civilization read into its formal phrase, grows as the American people grow.

He had no fear of the results of such a constitutional philosophy. He stood in no terror of the American people. He did not believe that the strict construction of a formal word, written four generations ago, when the Republic contained but 4,000,000 souls, the nation was only in the beginnings of its making, the uses of steam and electricity unknown, Pittsburg farther from New York than Chicago is from the Orient to-day, city congestions undreamed of, and the modern methods of production and distribution unimagined—he did not think that rigid sentences written under such circumstances a hundred and thirty years ago have necessarily the same meaning now as then, or that the safety and happiness of the nation's 90,000,000 of Americans to-day and 200,000,000 of Americans to-morrow is to be found in the Constitution's lifeless word so much as in its living spirit giving intelligent meaning to its letter.

For Senator PLATT believed in the American people. He did not believe that they are or ever will be decadent and degenerate. He believed that the masses are growing wiser and purer; knew that this must be so unless our whole American civilization is a failure. He realized that the nation is constantly renewing itself, each generation facing with new thought the new problems that the very progress of their parents brought to them. He went upon the theory that our children will be abler, stronger, nobler than ourselves; knew that if this is not true our schools and our churches, our free institutions, and the whole of modern life is a tragic mockery.

And this is the necessary view point and attitude of statesmanship under free institutions; we individuals grow old with frightful speed; we retain our life's first impression unmindful of the profound changes in the world about us; we keep on thinking the thoughts of our youth, long since grown ancient to our children; we reason in the old formulas and speak a nomenclature of a day that is gone. But all about us millions of young men and young women have grown up amid conditions unlike those that we were reared among, and they are thinking thoughts and learning facts we never knew and speaking a tongue we never heard. It is a new nation that surrounds us; a nation of millions upon millions of fresh and vital minds yeasting with ideas; a nation of millions upon millions of new and unexhausted hearts full of faith in God and the Republic—aye, and full of the daring of that faith.

The statesman of such a nation must have a mind and heart of perennial youth, or he ceases to understand his people, begins to doubt and then to fear them, and, without knowing it, becomes their enemy. And just such a mind and heart was that of Senator PLATT.

All who knew him intimately were agreed that the amazing youthfulness of his mind was by far his most notable mental characteristic. Old as he was, he attacked new problems with the eager strength of young manhood's mental vitality, solved them with young manhood's faith. He never doubted the wisdom, righteousness, and power of the American people. He believed devoutly, unquestioningly in their mission and destiny in the world. Who that heard will ever forget his instantaneous and unprepared reply to the venerable Senator from Massachusetts on our duty in the Philippines and our certain future in the Orient and the world? How like a prophet of the olden time he seemed that evening, as with eyes glowing with religious fire and voice ringing trumpet-clear as the voice of youth, he delivered with passionate earnestness that inspired speech. Here is the way he closed this extemporaneous address, delivered about 6 o'clock in the evening:

> We are under the obligation and direction of a higher power with reference to our duty in the Philippine Islands. The United States of America has a high call to duty, to a moral duty, to a duty to advance the cause of free government in the world by something more than example. It is not enough to say to a country over which we have acquired an undisputed and indisputable sovereignty: "Go your own gait; look at our example. In the entrance of the harbor of New York, our principal port, there is the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World. Look at that, and follow our example."
> No, Mr. President. When the Anglo-Saxon race crossed the Atlantic and stood on the shores of Massachusetts Bay and on Plymouth Rock that movement meant something more than the establishment of religious and civil liberty within a narrow, confined, and limited compass. It had in it the force of the Almighty; and from that day to this it has been spreading, widening, and extending until, like the stone seen by Daniel in his vision cut out of the mountain without hands, it has filled all our borders, and ever westward across the Pacific that influence which found its home in the Mayflower and its development on Plymouth Rock has been extending and is extending its sway and its beneficence.
> I believe, Mr. President, that the time is coming, as surely coming as the time when the world shall be Christianized, when the world shall be converted to the cause of free government, and I believe the United States is a providentially appointed agent for that purpose. The day may be long in coming, and it may be in the far future, but he who has studied the history of this western world from the 22d day of December, 1620, to the present hour must be blind indeed if he can not see that the cause of free government in the world is still progressing and that what the United States is doing in the Philippine Islands is in the extension of that beneficent purpose. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 11, 1902.)

I read this, Mr. President, not to show his particular opinion upon this public question, but to show the youthfulness, the hopefulness, and the almost prophetic nature of his amazing mind. It was with this youthful vigor, vision, and undoubtingness that Senator PLATT solved the Cuban question. There was no precedent. He made one. I understand the philosophy of precedent, the absolute necessity in a free government of established forms and methods. But it requires no special ability to follow the blazed trail. Ordinary intelligence can cite precedents and apply decided cases to like situations. It needs greatness to create by sheer thought solutions of unheard-of problems. And that is what Senator PLATT did in the immortal Platt amendment, which, written in our statutes and incorporated in the Cuban constitution, established over that island the indestructible suzerainty of the Republic—all for the good and safety of the Cuban and the American people alike.

To those who asked where in the Constitution such power is given Congress, he answered by the counter question, "Where is such power denied?" For he believed that the United States may do all that any other nation can do, unless the Constitution forbids it. Here is what he said in a great debate in this Chamber:

> I maintain that the United States is a nation; that as a nation it possesses every sovereign power not reserved to the States or the people; that the right to acquire territory was not reserved and is therefore an inherent sovereign right; * * * that in certain instances the right may be inferred from specific clauses in the Constitution, but that it exists independent of these clauses; that as the right to acquire is a sovereign and inherent right, the right to govern is a sovereign right not limited in the Constitution.

Whether all Senators agreed to these views or not, when it came to adopting the Platt amendment, so deeply wise, so imminently necessary, was that historic creation that although constitutional doubts filled the air and a single speech would have defeated it, since Congress was expiring even as it passed, yet not one voice was openly raised against it. And thus entered into the law and life of two peoples, and into their intertwined history, the fifth eternal writing produced by American statesmanship—the first four being the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, the Ordinance of 1787, the Emancipation Proclamation, and, last, this indissoluble bond uniting forever the destinies of Cuba and the American Republic.

An American statesman should be as brave and unqualifiedly frank as he is incorruptible. Frankness—even aggressive openness—is necessary in the public men of a free people. Not only the people at large, but the vast business and financial interests need to know at the earliest possible moment the opinions and purposes of statesmen. He who conceals his views is dangerous; he who has none is unworthy. Senator PLATT was to his people and to all men a speaking voice, an open book. On gravest industrial questions, which make the mere politician who masquerades as a statesman tremble and pale with fear, ORVILLE H. PLATT told where he stood and then stood there fighting with the courage of his wisdom.

For example, the farmers of Connecticut petitioned him to support a certain bill; he refused, because he thought that measure not good for the Republic. The laboring men of Connecticut asked for measures he thought unwise for the Nation; he told them so and then acted on his thought. Moneyed interests in Connecticut demanded certain action; he declined because he thought it hurtful from the view point of all the people. All of the people and not some of the people, the whole country and not a section—this was the universal measurement of his vision. Everybody knew where ORVILLE H. PLATT stood on everything. All great statesmen are like that. They remind you of the mountains—landmarks for the centuries. "What will you have your representative be," said Edmund Burke in his speech to the electors of Bristol, in which all the elements of statesmanship are said to be defined—"what will you have your representative be, a pillar supporting the temple of state or a weathercock upon its dome?"

The American statesman must be religious, because the American people are the most profoundly and intelligently religious people of the world. Senator PLATT was intensely religious. He was a man of daily prayer. The living God was to him a personal reality, and to him service of fellow-man was wise only as it was service of the Father. He wrote a nation's laws in the fear of the Lord. He believed absolutely in Providence; believed that the American people are directed by divine wisdom. How splendid such a conception of national destiny! The Ruler of the universe brought a new force into play in the evolution of the human race when he established on this new continent the American people, and of that people ORVILLE H. PLATT was a sage and prophet.

He is gone, this mighty one. Not many now remember him or his priceless services to the State. Only one vast achievement—the Platt amendment—will perpetuate his name. Such is oblivion's remorseless wisdom. There are so many swarming millions of human beings, such numberless events in the lives of each, such flowing oceans of circumstance that the world can not, for long, remember any one. Time is a prompt stage manager—he thrusts us on and calls us from this human stage on the hour, and not one instant in our entrance or exit may we tarry. Men plan and speak and do—and think that to-morrow other men will heed or remember; but the other day an unknown and unheard of city was unearthed by accident, which had a splendid history of great men and glorious deeds, of wise laws and polite culture five thousand years before Christ.

So all that a man does must be with different motives than to-day's applause or to-morrow's remembrance. Your deed for the deed's sake—for the good it may do although utterly unnoted like a single furrow among its million fellows. This is the only conception of duty that makes man's best efforts worth the while. And this was the conception that inspired Senator PLATT through all his years. It was nothing to him that men should remember or observe what he said or did; it was everything to him that his word and deed accomplished something for his country. And so he was fearless and pure and wise and brave; his life without stain, his course without variableness or shadow of turning. It was this conception of duty, vitalizing and consecrating his great intellect, that made him the ideal statesman of the American people.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I can not let this occasion pass without saying a few words.

The services that Senator PLATT rendered to his State and country have been so well recounted by those who have preceded me that I shall not do more than say a few words as to the great loss sustained by this body and the country at large. Words can add nothing to the fame or virtues of the dead. His actions alone are the highest praise—all other eulogies fail.

It is true when he came here twenty-six years ago he was unknown to the nation, but when he died no Senator was better known. Attention to duty made him thoroughly familiar with all legislation. He gave great thought and care to all the interests of the country. He had studied closely the history of legislation, and, possessing great legal attainments, was always alert to achieve the best to be accomplished.

In his death we have lost a friend and companion always ready to aid and assist those younger in years than himself, and I can not fail to express my high appreciation and deep regard for the kindness shown me as a new member of this body and the great personal loss I feel at his death.

He died at home, as every wise man should wish to, in the midst of those who loved him, and is buried among the hills of the State that knew and honored him and which he loved.

I know no words more fitting to describe Senator PLATT than those of Robert Browning:

> One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward;
> Never doubted clouds would break,
> Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph;
> Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
> Sleep to wake.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the traditions of the Senate direct that I should pronounce the final words in these sad ceremonies. I realize that it is impossible to add anything to what has already been so eloquently and sweetly said by the score of speakers who have preceded me. And yet, though appreciating fully the difficulties of the situation, I should be remiss in my duty to my State, to myself, and most of all, to him, should I omit to say those things which lie in my heart.

Mr. President, no man has ever solved the riddle of existence. No man ever will solve it. Whoever shall, will have ceased to be mortal and will have become superhuman. From that time in the mists of antiquity, when mankind assumed the upright attitude and looked the heavens in the face, we have wondered from whence we came and whither we go. Philosophers have disputed, theologians have contended, physicists, archeologists, psychologists, astronomers, prophets, mathematicians, poets, orators, statesmen, physicians, and magicians have theorized, written, argued, yearned, imagined, and prayed, and, in so far as human knowledge and human investigation are concerned, we end where we began. We talk glibly of the categories of time, space, and eternity, but no man can conceive of them. We pronounce the word "Infinity," and when we attempt to define it the intellect sprawls helplessly! The mystery of existence, of chaos, of the primordial, and of the finality was the mystery of the past, is the mystery of to-day, and will continue the mystery of the future. It is immutable, inexorable, unfathomable! Mr. President, the two momentous words of human speech are "Whence" and "Whither." The brain will never answer these questions. The human heart may. We know very little. We feel very much. How very little we know! We distinguish life from death, but are in gross ignorance of the cause, the origin, or the termination of both.

Among mysteries one inexplicable thing is no more remarkable than another. One may affect our emotions more than another, but fundamentally all are equally incomprehensible. Why should a seed sprout? Why should like produce like? Why should nature be uniform and constant? Why should matter attract matter according to the law of gravitation? Why should opposite electric poles attract each other? What is electricity? Why do certain forms of matter crystalize in certain shapes? What is chemical affinity? Why does the human race exist, and what is its purpose and end? Why the universe? No one of these inquiries is more or less difficult than the other. All nature is an impenetrable mystery. Science may collate statistics, may observe and tabulate phenomena, but it will never render a satisfactory response. But from the dawn of history we know that the heart has answered that which the brain might not know. The heart has faith to believe that, knowledge or no knowledge, if a man be true to his own conscience he may stand before his maker justified and without fear. And to-day we speak of such a man. How great he was! His character, like his statue, should be delineated in heroic lines. Like Abraham of old, ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT stands out from the multitude. He was a leader. He did not lead because he tried to lead, but because the people followed him. He did not lead because he pretended to be the special friend of the people, as demagogues are wont to do, but because he laid his course by his own compass and that compass always pointed to the true pole. In the long run the people can always be relied upon to distinguish between a demagogue and a patriot, and they always did so in the case of Mr. PLATT. Five consecutive times the people of Connecticut accredited him as their ambassador to this great conclave of the representatives of the sovereign States of this Republic. For twenty-six years he sat in this Chamber and fearlessly, faithfully, and nobly discharged that trust. If that may truthfully be said of any man, it is, in my opinion, the highest encomium that can be pronounced upon him. There is not, engraved upon bronze nor carved in marble, in the Valley of the Nile or of the Tigris or of the Euphrates or of the Ganges, nor in the Pantheons of Rome, Carthage, or Greece, an epitaph of achievement fraught with greater blessing to humanity than a quarter of a century of able, courageous, and conscientious work in this great parliamentary body.

Senator PLATT consecrated one-third of his entire life to this lofty ministry! Mr. President, how easy it is to say that, and yet how utterly hollow and unsatisfactory it is and how meager and shallow it sounds! What a fullness and completeness there was to that great and lengthy service! With what a multitude of events and cares and duties it was crowded! With what perplexities, with how great anxieties, with how innumerable responsibilities, always splendidly met, it was filled!

It is beyond the power of speech, or pen, or art to epitomize such a career in the compass of a few strokes of the pen or in the brief period of time devoted to this occasion. We all feel the inadequacy of mere words to express what we to-day feel and what but yesterday he was. And yet we fain would strive to record somewhat of the love which we his friends and associates bore for him and something of the respect and veneration in which the whole country held him. Mr. PLATT entered this body in 1879 at the age of 52 years. He had previously been honored by the confidence and esteem of the people of his State. He had been the chairman of the State central committee of his party, the speaker of the Connecticut house of representatives, a State senator, the secretary of the State, and the State's attorney of New Haven County. He was a well-known and able lawyer, and had devoted himself more particularly to the law of patents, in which he had attained a high proficiency. He therefore entered upon his duties here, in middle life, equipped with a ripe experience in the law, in politics, in business, and in public affairs. He devoted this fund of knowledge to practical use in his legislative work. He was no theorist. He was not a doctrinaire. He had none of the traits of the visionary or the mystic. He dreamed no dreams and he pur-sned no chimeras. He insisted upon the facts. He was virile and powerful, mentally and physically. His appearance was most impressive. He was cast in the patriarchal mold. He towered to a height of 6 feet and 4 inches, and his frame and head were as massive and rugged as the granite ledges and crags of his native Litchfield County.

His features were large and somewhat furrowed, and to those who saw him for the first time his countenance was apt to convey a suggestion of austerity. But this effect was relieved by the saving grace of a delicious sense of humor and an inimitable twinkle of the eye. His manner was deliberate, and he was well balanced and at all times perfectly self-controlled. He was patient, industrious, kindly, cautious, and sound. He was preeminently safe and sane. His judgment was excellent and his gift of common sense approached to genius. His temperament was judicial, and he clearly perceived and carefully weighed every phase of a question. With his clear vision he penetrated the heart of every problem and discriminated with unerring precision between the vital principles upon which a correct solution depended and the irrelevant and delusive matters which confuse other minds. He was possessed of an intuitive sense as to the wisest course to pursue, which was so accurate as to amount almost to prescience. He despised shams, hypocrisy, and pretense. He was straightforward, sincere, and reliable. He was a man of sterling integrity, and was as honest with himself as with his fellows. It was as impossible to deceive him as it was for him to attempt to deceive others. He was inspired with high ideals and was endowed with a deep religious nature. His logical mind moved with the mathematical accuracy of an adding machine, and the most complicated questions were reduced and clarified in the fervent crucible of his intellectual analysis. He was intensely human and was always glad to cloak the faults of others with the broad mantle of charity. He was passionately fond of nature. The sound of the brooks tumbling down their rocky beds, the rustle of the leaves in the woods, the songs of birds, the voices of the wild things, the variegated tints of the foliage, the odors of flower and fern and moist glade, the sunshine and shadow, the dying monarch of the forest and the springing bud, the sunset skies, the majesty of the snow-capped mountain, the abyss of the dark canyon, the rolling prairie, the river sweeping away into the distance, the vast and heaving ocean, all these spoke to him in a language of music and poetry to which every fiber of his soul was attuned and to which it responded with joy and gratitude.

Among all the honors, the battles, and the triumphs of his life, continued far beyond the three score years and ten allotted by the Psalmist, the home of his boyhood and the wild scenery and stalwart people of his native Litchfield County lay closest to his heart. In the free, open air of this beautiful section, as he whipped the brooks and hunted its game, he developed that magnificent character which never knew a stain and that splendid courage which never surrendered a principle. Here he imbibed that wholesome nature, that childlike faith, that moral standard and stamina, that indomitable will, that fine perception, that shrewd insight, that independence and love of personal liberty, which made him a tower of strength and a very present help in time of trouble.

Mr. President, in the death of Senator PLATT Connecticut lost her ablest and most distinguished public servant, this body one of its wisest and most trusted counselors, and the nation one of its soundest statesmen. He always dared to act as he believed. He never compromised with expediency. He was a great man—in stature, in brain, in character, in influence, in deeds, and in righteousness. Upon his first election to the Senate, now twenty-seven years ago, at a reception given him by his friends and neighbors in the city of Meriden, he spoke a few simple words which can not fail to touch us deeply now, and which formed the mainspring of his public and private life. He said:

I thank you, my friends, for this kind reception. This is neither the time nor the place to make a speech, and yet I think I would be lacking in the common feeling of humanity if I did not express to you in some way the gratitude I feel for the respect you have ever shown me. It touches me, coming as it does from you who have known me longest and best—the men I have lived with these twenty-eight years. I have lived a somewhat transparent life. You know what I have done and what I have failed to do. It is this that makes this demonstration the more acceptable and touching to me. I think no man could have lived in a place so long and have been more sensible of the kindly feeling entertained toward him than I. I want to thank all my friends, but especially my Meriden friends. They were not politicians, but were full of love and devotion and labored for my welfare without hope of reward, and such kindly feeling and disposition touches me to the heart. Their faith makes me rejoice more at their gratification than my success. Just now everything is new and seems unreal. I can scarcely appreciate the future. How I shall bear myself, how I shall walk in the new path in which I am set, time will show. I do know that I shall try to do right as I see the right, and I have faith to believe that this will bring me through to the end without discredit to you, to myself, or to the State. My friends, this is no place for an announcement of my political views. I have in the course of my life dealt and received many hard political blows, but I have always tried to act right and shall so continue. I thank you again for your kindness, and I trust that all your expectations with reference to me will not be disappointed. Good night.

How clearly and beautifully his character shines through these simple and informal remarks to the friends and neighbors who had gathered to do him honor, and how abundantly and splendidly he justified the confidence which had been reposed in him!

Mr. PLATT was a progressive and constructive legislator. He made no pretense to oratory, and yet his clear thought was couched in terse Saxon phrase and delivered with an earnest force which was closely akin to eloquence and carried greater conviction. Whatever attitude he assumed upon a public question was the result of his honest, deliberate judgment, and this was evinced in every tone, jesture, and look. He had an abiding faith in the institutions, the people, and the destiny of this country, and, in turn, he was loved and trusted by the people whose confidence he always retained. He cared nothing for wealth, but everything for men. He was liberal, tolerant, charitable, sympathetic, and of infinite patience and unflagging zeal. His influence upon men and measures was always helpful and salutary. The loss of such a man is indeed a public calamity. But his character and the lesson of his career are immortal and invaluable. We revere the memory of such men, not only for what they did, but for what they were. We need not wait for posterity to look backward through the vista of time for a just appraisal of that character or that life work. He was long ago crowned with the affection of his colleagues and the admiration and gratitude of his constituents. Less than two years before his death the people of his State, irrespective of party or sex, gathered at our beautiful capitol building in the fair city of Hartford and rivaled each other in testifying their affection for him at a great reception given in his honor. To-day we have heard tributes of respect and the loving words which have been spoken by his friends and associates in this great body. Unconsciously we are carried back at this time to the scene in that same capitol at Hartford just one month before the death of Senator PLATT, when he stood by the bier of his beloved colleague of a quarter of a century, Senator Joseph R. Hawley. Senator PLATT said:

Is he dead? No. By our most earnest hopes, by all of our devoutest faith, no. He has but begun to live. In those subterranean cemeteries under the ancient city of Rome—in the catacombs—there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of inscriptions on the slabs which close the resting places of those early martyrs, the faithful ones, or scratched rudely in the plaster above them; but of all those inscriptions which tell of the triumph of faith, of the beyond, one has always seemed to me most significant. It is this—these simple words—"He entered into life." That is what General Hawley has done. We are not here so much to mourn his death, as, it seems to me, to celebrate his birth into a new and a better life; into a field of greater, larger, and more spiritual activities. It is a birthday, not a death day, after all, which brings us together, which knits all hearts in love and sympathy. Henry Ward Beecher so often spoke of death as a coronation. It is. He is crowned now, this friend and comrade of ours, crowned, in the wonderful language of inspiration, by the Almighty "with glory and immortality." Why, then, should we weep? So we will not think of him as dead, but living, and we will think of him as we think of friends whom we sometimes go down to see as they sail away in ships for foreign lands, never expecting to see them with our eyes again, but knowing that they are still in life and in other fields exerting the activities of life. We will say farewell to-day as we commit him to the earth—no; not farewell, but that better word, "good-by"—God be with you—good-by. We will whisper that word "good-by," for the heart feels most, and the lips move not, and the eye speaks the gentle "good-by."

Within a span he, too, had embarked, and we think of him as he thought of Hawley. He had spun life's web to the finish; the fabric was complete.

Let us take to ourselves a lesson,
No lesson can braver be,
Of the ways of the tapestry weavers,
On the other side of the sea.

Above their head the pattern hangs,
They study it with care,
The while their fingers deftly weave,
Their eyes are fastened there.

They tell this curious thing besides,
Of the patient, plodding weaver,
He works on the wrong side evermore,
But works for the right side ever.

It is only when his work is done,
And the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees the real handiwork
His marvelous skill has learned.

Ah, the sight of its delicate beauty!
How it pays him for all its cost!
No rarer, daintier work than his
Was ever done by the frost.

The years of man are nature's looms,
Let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving alway,
Till the mystic web is done.

Sometimes blindly—but weaving surely,
Each for himself his fate;
We may not see how the right side looks,
We must often weave—and wait.

Mr. President, in the ripeness of a vast experience and in the fullness of earthly honors, with every duty performed and every obligation redeemed, he has entered into the joys of the blessed. His services in this Senate will be treasured among its proudest memories, and his fame and his career will always remain as a sacred legacy and an inspiring example to the people of his State. As we are in and of a world of mysteries, who knows but that to-day, not afar off, but very near, and in this very presence, the mighty who have heretofore sat within these walls, are silent spectators of these solemn proceedings, having put on immortality in the effulgence and glory of the choir invisible?

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Connecticut.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of our former colleague, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 23, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 21, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

The SPEAKER. On yesterday the House insisted on its amendment to Senate bill 4250—the quarantine bill—and assented to the request of the Senate for a conference. The Chair appointed the conferees—one of them Representative DAVEY of Louisiana. The Chair is reliably informed by his colleagues and others that Representative DAVEY is not in the city and will not be for some days. Therefore the Chair appoints, vice DAVEY of Louisiana, Representative BARTLETT.

ST. ELIZABETH'S ASYLUM.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report. The Committee on Rules reports back the resolution of the House No. 277 with a substitute, with the recommendation for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of the House a committee of five, with full power and whose duty it shall be to make a full and complete investigation of the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane and report their findings and conclusions to the House; said committee is empowered to send for persons and papers, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths, to take testimony and reduce the same to writing, and to employ such clerical and stenographic help as may be necessary, all expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will reserve the previous question for a moment, I would like to make a statement of about one minute.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to state that the report of the Committee on Rules is a unanimous report, joined in by the minority members as well as the majority.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for a vote.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

FURTHER RELIEF FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 141) for the further relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast.
